A STATISTICAL ACCOUNT

OF THE

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

THE United States, a confederacy of sovereign States, and the most influential republic of the world, occupies the middle portion of North America. This confederation, consisting originally of thirteen States, but now of thirty-one States, the federal district, and several territorial appendages, lies between the parallels of 24° and 49° north latitude, and the meridians of 10° east and 48° west from Washington, or 67° and 125° from Greenwich, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and from the British colonies on the north, to the republic of Mexico and the great Gulf on the south. The whole extent of this boundary is now definitely settled by treaty.* The greatest width of this country, from east to west, is 2,900 miles, and the greatest depth, from north to south, 1,730 miles. Its area may be estimated at 3,260,000 square miles, including California, Texas, etc., recently acquired. It has a frontier of about 10,000 miles, of which 4,400 is sea-coast, and 1,500 lake-coast.

The territory of the United States is traversed by two principal chains of mountains, the Alleghanies on the east side, and the Rocky Mountains on the west. These divide the country into three distinct regions: the Atlantic slope, the valley of the Mississippi, and the declivity from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific.

The ALLEGHANIES are less a chain of mountains than a long plateau, crested with several chains of mountains or hills, separated from each other by wide and elevated valleys. East of the Hudson the mountains are chiefly granitic, with rounded summits, often covered at their tops with bogs and turf, and distributed in irregular groups without any marked direction. Some peaks of the Green Mountains, in Vermont, and the White Mountains, in New Hampshire, rise to the height of 5,000 to 6,400 feet above the sea. After passing the Hudson, the structure of the mountains seems to change. In Pennsylvania and Virginia they assume the form of long parallel ridges, varying in height from 2,500 to 4,000 feet and occupying a breadth of one hundred miles. In North Carolina, the highest culmination is 6,476 feet; but in the northern part of Georgia and Alabama, where they terminate, they again lose the form of continuous chains, and break into groups of isolated mountains, touching at their base, some of which attain a considerable elevation.

The ROCKY MOUNTAINS are on a much grander scale than the Alleghanies. Their base is 300 miles in breadth, and their loftiest summits, covered with everlasting snow, rise to the height of 10 to 14,000 feet. These vast chains may be considered as a continuation of the Cordilleras of Mexico. They are distant from the Pacific Ocean from 5 to 600 miles, but between them and the coast several minor ranges intersect the country, of which the Maritime Range is the most conspicuous.

The immense valley included between these two ranges of mountains is intersected by the Mississippi River, which runs, from north to south, all through the United States. The country west of the Mississippi, with little exception, is yet a wilderness, inhabited by roving bands of Indians, and beyond the limits of the organized States the whites have scarcely a settlement; but the country east of that river is thickly populated, and in the highest state of cultivation. The most remarkable feature in the face of the country is the low plain, from 50 to 100 miles wide, which extends along the Atlantic coast. Beyond this plain the land rises toward the interior till it terminates in the Alleghanies. The rest of the country east of the Mississippi is agreeably diversified with hills and valleys, plains and mountains. The soil of the low country, except on the banks of creeks and rivers, is sandy, and comparatively unproductive; but the remainder has a strong, fertile soil, capable of supporting a dense population. The Pacific section is a highly varied country, abounding in wild and majestic scenery, and traversed by magnificent rivers. Much, however, of its interior is desert, and will probably never be inhabited by civilized man. The great California desert, indeed, is one of the dreariest regions of the world, the solitude being relieved only by a few oases in the neighborhood of streams, or on the borders of its numerous lakes; on these alone is there even an aboriginal population.

* The treaties relative to these boundaries are, 1. Treaty of Paris, 1763. 2. Treaty of London, 1764. 3. Louisiana Treaty, 1803. 4. Treaty of Ghent, 1814. 5. Convention of London, 1818 and 1823. 6. Florida Treaty, 1819. 7. Treaty with Mexico, 1823. 8. Treaty with Russia, 1824. 9. Ashburton Treaty, 1842. 10. Texas Annexation Resolutions, 1845. 11. Oregon Treaty, 1846. 12. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The shores of the United States are washed by three seas: the Atlantic Ocean, on the east, the Gulf of Mexico, on the south, and the Pacific Ocean, on the west. The principal bays and sounds on the Atlantic border are Passamaquoddy Bay, which lies between the State of Maine and the British province of New Brunswick; Massachusetts Bay, between Cape Ann and Cape Cod; Long Island Sound, between Long Island and the coast of Connecticut; Delaware Bay, which sets up between Cape May and Cape Henlopen, separating the States of New Jersey and Delaware; Chesapeake Bay, which communicates with the ocean between Cape Charles and Cape Henry, extending in a northern direction for 200 miles, through the States of Virginia and Maryland; Albemarle Sound, and Pamlico Sound, on the coast of North Carolina. There are no large bays or sounds on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. On the Pacific coast, however, there are several excellent bays, but the principal and only one necessary to mention is the Bay of San Francisco, in the State of California. It is one of the finest bays in the world, and capable of containing the navies of all the European powers at one time.

With the exception of Michigan and Champlain, none of the great lakes of North America lie wholly within the territory of the United States; the rest are on the northern boundary, where they form a connected chain, extending through a distance of more than 1,200 miles. The first in the chain is Lake Superior, the largest body of fresh water on the globe. Few persons are really aware of the magnitude of these great lakes; they are truly inland seas, and navigation is as dangerous, and subjected to all the vicissitudes which are connected with the navigation of the Baltic, the Black Sea, or the Mediterranean. The following is a tabular statement of the extent of these fresh-water seas, with the mean depth of their waters, and their elevation above the sea.

Lake Champlain, lying between Vermont and New York, is 128 miles long, and from 1 to 16 miles wide, and discharges its waters through the Sorel into the St. Lawrence. It is computed that the lakes contain above 14,000 cubic miles of water—a quantity more than five-sevenths of all the fresh water on the earth. The extent of country drained by the lakes, from the north-western angle of Superior to the St. Lawrence, including also the area of the lakes themselves, is estimated at 335,515 square miles.

The principal rivers of the United States may be divided into four classes. First, the Mississippi and its wide-spread branches, which drain the waters of the whole country included between the Alleghany and Rocky Mountains; second, the rivers east of the Alleghany Mountains, which, rising from their eastern declivity, water the Atlantic plain, and hence flow into the ocean; third, the system of rivers flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, which may be subdivided into those flowing from the southern slope of the Alleghanies, and those having their source in the north-western highlands of Texas; and, fourth, those streams on the west of the Rocky Mountains, which flow into the Pacific Ocean.

The Mississippi rises west of Lake Superior, in latitude 47° 47' north, amid lakes and swamps, dreary and desolate beyond description; and after a south-east course of about 500 miles, reaches the Falls of the St. Anthony, where it descends perpendicularly 16 feet, and where are numerous rapids. From these falls it pursues at first a south-easterly, and then a southerly direction; and, after forming the boundary between Iowa, Missouri, and Arkansas, on the west, and Wisconsin, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi, on the east, passes through Louisiana, and discharges itself through a delta of many mouths into the Gulf of Mexico. It is nearly 3,200 miles in length, and is navigable, with few obstructions, to the Falls of St. Anthony.

Its principal tributaries from the east are—1. The Wisconsin, which joins it between the parallels of 42° and 43° north latitude;—2. The Illinois, a navigable river, which joins it near latitude 38° 40' north;—3. The Ohio, which is itself formed by the junction of the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers at Pittsburg. It flows in a south-westerly direction for 945 miles, separating the north-western States from Virginia and Kentucky, and falls into the Mississippi in 37° north latitude. The chief tributaries of the Ohio are the Wabash, the Cumberland, and the Tennessee, which last is formed of several streams from the western parts of Virginia and the Carolinas, which unite a little west of Knoxville, in the State of Tennessee, and runs at first south-west into Alabama, where it turns and runs north-west, through Tennessee into Kentucky, and joins the Ohio 10 miles below the mouth of the Cumberland; and—4. The Yazoo, which rises in the northern part of the State of Mississippi, and, running south-west, joins the Mississippi 100 miles above Natchez.

The tributaries from the west are—1. The Minnesota, or St. Peter's, which joins it about nine miles below the Falls of St. Anthony, after a south-east course of several hundred miles;—2. The Des Moines, which joins it near the parallel of 40° north latitude, after a south-easterly course of more than 800 miles;—3. The Missouri, which is formed by three branches, called Jefferson's, Madison's, and Gallatin's rivers, all of which rise and unite in the Rocky Mountains. The whole length, from the highest point of Jefferson's River, to the confluence with the Mississippi, is, by actual course, about 2,500 miles, and to the Gulf of Mexico nearly 4,000 miles; during the whole of which distance there is no cataract or considerable impediment to the navigation, except at Great Falls, which are above 2,000 miles from the Mississippi. At these falls the river descends, in the distance of 18 miles, 362 feet. The principal tributaries of the Missouri are the Yellow Stone, which rises in the Rocky Mountains, and joins it after a north-easterly course of 600 miles; the Nebraska, or Platte, which rises also in those mountains, and, after an easterly course of 800 miles, joins the Missouri in latitude 41° north; and the Kansas, which joins it near latitude 39° north, after an easterly course of more than 600 miles;—4. The Arkansas, which rises in the Rocky Mountains, and pursuing a south-easterly course, forms, for some distance, the boundary between the Indian Territory and Texas; after which its course lies principally in the State of Arkansas, till it joins the Mississippi in 34° north latitude. Its length is more than 1,300 miles;—5. The Red River, which also rises in the Rocky Mountains, below Sante Fé, and, after a south-easterly course of more than 1,000 miles, falls into the Mississippi in latitude 31° north.

The principal rivers east of the Alleghanies are—1. The Connecticut, which rises in the highlands separating the United States from Canada, and running southerly, divides New Hampshire from Vermont, and passing through Massachusetts and Connecticut, falls into Long Island Sound. It is navigable for sloops for fifty miles to Hartford, and by means of canals and other improvements, has been rendered passable for boats 250 miles farther;—2. The Hudson, which rises west of Lake Champlain, and pursuing a southerly course of more than 300 miles, falls into the Bay of New York, after receiving numerous affluents. It is navigable for ships to Hudson, 130 miles, and for sloops and steamboats to Troy, 40 miles farther. It is connected with Lakes Champlain, Erie, and Ontario by means of canals from Albany, and with the Delaware by a canal from Rondout;—3. The Delaware, which rises in New York, and flowing southerly, separates Pennsylvania from New York and New Jersey, and falls into Delaware Bay, after a course of 300 miles. It is navigable for ships of the line 40 miles, to Philadelphia, and for sloops 35 miles farther, to the head of the tide at Trenton Falls;—4. The Susquehanna, which also rises in New York, and, pursuing a southerly zig-zag course through Pennsylvania, falls into the head of Chesapeake Bay, near the north-east corner of Maryland. During the last 50 miles the navigation is obstructed by an almost continued series of rapids;—5. The Potomac, which rises in the Alleghanies, and, after forming, during its whole course, the boundary between Maryland and Virginia, falls into Chesapeake Bay. It is navigable for ships of the largest dimensions to Washington, the federal capital, about 200 miles from the ocean; but in the upper part of its course there are numerous obstacles, many of which, however, have been overcome by canals;—6. James River, which rises in the mountains, and falls into the southern part of Chesapeake Bay; and—7. The Savannah, which forms the dividing line between South Carolina and Georgia, and falls into the Atlantic in latitude 32° north. It is navigable for large vessels to Savannah, 17 miles; and for boats to Augusta, 130 miles farther.

The principal rivers which rise south of the Alleghanies, and fall into the Gulf of Mexico, are—1. The Apalachicola, which discharges itself into Apalachee Bay, in Florida. It is formed by the union of the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers, the former of which rises in the northern part of Georgia, and flowing south, receives the Flint at the south-west extremity of the State. During the latter part of its course, the Chattahoochee forms the boundary between Georgia and Alabama;—2. The Mobile, which discharges itself into Mobile Bay. It is formed by two large rivers, the Alabama and Tombigbee, which unite near latitude 31° north, after having pursued each a separate course of many hundred miles. There is another system of rivers flowing into the Gulf from the highlands of northern Texas, consisting of the Sabine, Trinity, Brazos, etc., which need only be mentioned here, as the geography of Texas will be minutely described elsewhere.

The rivers flowing from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, consist of—1. The Columbia, which rises near latitude 55° north, and running south-west, falls into the ocean in latitude 46° 15', after a course of 1,500 miles. Its principal tributaries are Clark's River, Lewis' River, and the Multnomah or Willamette, all of which join it on its left bank. This river was discovered in 1792, and settlements were made in the neighborhood by Americans in 1810. The mouth of the river is obstructed by flats, but vessels of 300 tons can ascend to the distance of 125 miles, and large sloops farther;—2. The Sacramento and San Joaquin, emptying into the Bay of San Francisco;—3. The Buenaventura, rising in the coast range of the California Mountains, empties into Monterey Bay;—4. The Colorado, and River Gila (which separates Mexico from the United States), flow from the mountains near Santa Fé, and would, if not received by the Gulf of California, empty into the Pacific; they belong, however, to the same system of rivers.

The government of the United States is a federal democratic republic. It is based on the constitution of 1787, and amendments thereto.

The electors of the most numerous branch of the several State Legislatures are qualified electors in the States respectively for all elective officers of the general government.

All legislative powers are vested in Congress, which consists of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The "House of Representatives" is composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and in number in accordance with the population of each, and in order to ascertain the number each State is entitled to, a census is taken every ten years, excluding from the enumeration for this object two-thirds of the slaves, and all Indians not taxed. Each State is entitled to at least one representative. Vacancies are filled by intermediate elections. The House chooses its speaker and other officers. No person under twenty-five years of age, who has been less than seven years a citizen of the United States, and who is not a resident of the State electing him, is qualified for representative.

The constitution provided for a specific number of representatives from each State to compose the House until the ascertainment of the population under the census of 1790; but since then legislation has decennially fixed the number to be elected. From the 3d March, 1793, the apportionment was one representative to every 33,000 of the representative population; after 1803, one to every 33,000 also; after 1813, one to every 35,000; after 1823, one to every 40,000; after 1833, one to every 47,000; after 1843, one to every 70,680; and after 3d March, 1853, 233 representatives to be divided pro rata to the several States. The following table shows the number of representatives to which each State has been entitled since the establishment of the government:

In addition to these representatives from States, the House admits a delegate from each organized Territory, who has the right to debate on subjects in which his Territory is interested, but can not vote. California has two members by a special act.

The "Senate" consists of two members from each State, elected by the Legislatures thereof respectively for six years. One-third the whole body is renewed biennially, and if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive of such State makes a temporary appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, which fills such vacancy. Senators must be at least thirty years old, must have been citizens of the United States for nine years, and be residents of the State by which chosen. Each senator has one vote. The Vice-president of the United States is ex officio President of the Senate, but a president pro tempore is elected by and from among the Senators, who, in the absence of the president, acts in his stead.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The constitutional government went into operation on the 4th March, 1789, but a quorum of the first Congress, which met at the city of New York, was not formed until the 6th April, nor was the first president of the United States inaugurated before the 30th April. Besides its ordinary legislative capacity, the Senate is vested with certain judicial functions, and its members constitute a High Court of Impeachment. No person can be convicted by this court unless on the finding of a majority of Senators, nor does judgment extend further than to removal from office and disqualification. Representatives have the sole power of impeachment.

The Executive Power is vested in a President, who is elected by an Electoral College, chosen by popular vote, or by the Legislature of the State, the number of electors being equal to the number of Senators and Representatives from the States to Congress. His term of office is four years, but he is eligible for re-election indefinitely. The electors forming the college are themselves chosen in the manner prescribed by the laws of the several States. A majority of the aggregate number of votes given is necessary to the election of President and Vice-president, and if none of the candidates has such a majority, then the election of President is determined by the House of Representatives, and that of the Vice-president by the Senate, from among the three candidates having the highest number of electoral votes, and in doing so, the vote is taken by States, the representatives of each State having only one vote, which must, of course, be determined by a majority of their number. No person can be President or Vice-president who is not a native-born citizen, of the age of thirty-five years, and who has been a resident of the United States for fourteen years. The President is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of the militia when in the service of the Union. With the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senate, he has the power to make treaties, appoint civil and military officers, levy war, conclude peace, and do all that rightly belongs to the executive power. He has a veto on all laws passed by Congress, but so qualified, that notwithstanding his disapproval, any bill becomes a law on its being afterward approved of by two-thirds of both houses of Congress. The President has a salary of $25,000 per annum, and "the white house" at Washington for a residence during his official term. The Vice-president is ex-officio President of the Senate; and in case of the death, resignation, or other disability of the President, the powers and duties of that office devolve upon him for the remainder of the term for which the President had been elected. This provision of the constitution, for the first time since the foundation of the government, came into operation in 1841, on the demise of the late lamented General Harrison, who died 4th April, just one month after his inauguration, when John Tyler, the Vice-president, succeeded. Vice-president Fillmore also succeeded President Taylor under this provi-

The judicial powers of the United States are vested in a Supreme Court, and in such other inferior courts as Congress may from time to time establish. The present judicial establishment consists of a Supreme Court, Circuit Courts, and District Courts.

The "Supreme Court," the highest judicial tribunal of the Union, is composed of a Chief-Justice and eight Associate Justices, the Attorney-general, a Reporter, and Clerk. This court is held in Washington, and has one session annually, commencing on the first Monday in December.

The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction in all controversies of a civil nature where a State is a party, except between a State and its citizens, and except, also, between a State and citizens of other States or aliens—in which latter case it has original but not exclusive jurisdiction. It has exclusively all such jurisdiction of suits and proceedings against ambassadors or other public ministers, or their domestics or domestic servants, as a court of law can have or exercise consistently with the law of nations; and original, but not exclusive jurisdiction of all suits brought by ambassadors or other public ministers, in which a consul or a vice-consul is a party. It has appellate jurisdiction from final decrees and judgments of the circuit courts in cases where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum or value of 2,000 dollars, and from final decrees and judgments of the highest courts of the several States in certain cases. It has power to issue writs of prohibition to the District Courts, when proceeding as Courts of Admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; and writs of mandamus in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law to any courts appointed or persons holding office under the authority of the United States. The trial of issues in fact in the Supreme Court in all actions at law against citizens of the United States is by jury,

A final judgment or decree in any suit, in the highest court of law or equity of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or any authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the constitution, or of a treaty or statute of, or commission held under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or exemption, specially set up or claimed by either party, under such clause of the constitution, treaty, statute, or commission, may be re-examined, and reversed or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, the citation being signed by the Chief Justice, or Judge, or Chancellor of the court rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner, and under the same regulations, and the writ has the same effect, as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a Circuit Court; and the proceeding upon the reversal is also the same, except that the Supreme Court, instead of remanding the cause for a final decision, may, at their discretion, if the cause shall have been once remanded before, proceed to a final decision of the same, and award execution. But no other error can be assigned or regarded as a ground of reversal in any such case, than such as appears on the face of the record, and immediately respect the before-mentioned questions of validity or construction of the said constitution, treaties, statutes, commissions, or authorities, in dispute.

The "Circuit Courts" are held by a Justice of the Supreme Court assigned to the Circuit and by the Judge of the District in which the Court sits conjointly. The United States is divided into nine judicial Circuits, in each of which a Court is held twice a year. The Circuits are as follows:

- | | |
|---|--|
| I. Maine, N. Hampshire, Massachusetts, and R. Island. | VI. North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. |
| II. Vermont, Connecticut, and New York. | VII. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan. |
| III. New Jersey and Pennsylvania. | VIII. Kentucky, Tennessee, and Missouri. |
| IV. Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. | IX. Mississippi and Arkansas. |
| V. Alabama, Louisiana, and Kentucky. | |

The States of Florida, Texas, Iowa, Wisconsin and California have not yet been attached to any circuit; but the District Courts have the power of Circuit Courts. There is a local Circuit Court held in the District of Columbia by three judges specially appointed for that purpose. The Chief-Justice of that court sits also as District Judge of that District.

The Circuit Courts of the United States have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law, or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of 500 dollars, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of the State where the suit is brought and a citizen of another State. They have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States (except where the laws of the United States otherwise direct), and concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable therein. But no person can be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action, before a Circuit or District Court. No civil suit can be brought, before either of said courts, against an inhabitant of the United States, by any original process, in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ; and no District or Circuit Court has cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note, or other chose in action, in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents, if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange.

The Circuit Courts have appellate jurisdiction from final decrees and judgments of the District Courts, in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of fifty dollars. They also have jurisdiction of certain cases, which may be removed into them before trial from the State courts. But no District Judge (sitting in the Circuit Court) can give a vote in any case of appeal, or error, from his own decision, but may assign the reasons of such his decision. The trial of issues in fact in the Circuit Courts, in all suits, except those of equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, is by jury.

The "District Courts" are held respectively by a district judge alone. Each State is one district for the purposes of holding District or Circuit Courts therein, with the exception of New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and California, each of which is divided into two districts, and of Alabama, Tennessee, and Iowa, each of which are divided into three districts. There are besides these, Territorial Courts, which are temporary, and lose that character whenever a Territory becomes a State.

Each court has a clerk, a public attorney or prosecutor, and a marshal—all of which are appointed by the President of the United States, with the exception of the clerks, who are appointed by the courts severally.

The District Courts of the United States have, exclusively of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all crimes and offenses that are cognizable under the authority of the United States, committed within their respective districts, or upon the high seas, where no other punishment than whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, is to be inflicted, and also have exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including all seizures under the laws of impost, navigation, or trade, of the United States, where the seizures are made on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons' burthen, within their respective districts, as well as upon the high seas, saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it; and also have exclusive original cognizance of all seizures on land, or other waters than as aforesaid, made, and of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred, under the laws of the United States. And they also have cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, or their circuit courts, as the case may be, of all causes where an alien sues for a tort only in violation of the law of nations, or a treaty of the United States. They also have cognizance, concurrent as last mentioned, of all suits at common law, where the United States sue, and the matter in dispute amounts, exclusive of costs, to the sum or value of one hundred dollars. They also have jurisdiction, exclusively of the courts of the several States, of all suits against consuls or vice-consuls, except for offenses above the description aforesaid.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The trial of issues in fact, in the District Courts, in all causes, except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, is by jury.

An act of the 18th of December, 1812, requires the district and territorial judges of the United States to reside within the districts and territories, respectively, for which they are appointed; and makes it unlawful for any judge, appointed under the authority of the United States, to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law. And any person offending against the injunction or prohibition of this act, shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor.

Appeals are allowed from the District to the Circuit Courts in cases where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum in value of $50, and from the Circuit Courts to the Supreme Court in cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $2,000; and in some cases where the inconvenience of attending a court by a justice of the Supreme Court is very great, the District Courts are invested with Circuit Court powers.

The appointment of all judges of the United States is made by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate; and the judges hold their several offices during good behavior, and can be removed only on impeachment. Their compensation is fixed by law, and can not be diminished during their period of office.

V. INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—RAILROADS, ETC.

In no other particular can the prosperity of a country be more strikingly manifested than by the perfection of its roads and other means of internal communication. The system of railroads, canals, plank-roads, post-routes, river navigation, and telegraphs possessed by the United States, presents an indication of its advancement in power and civilization more wonderful than any other feature of its progress. In truth, the country in this respect occupies the first place among the nations of the world.

The primary design of nearly all the great lines of railway in the United States has been to connect the sea-coast with the distant interior; to effect which object it was necessary to cross the Alleghanies, which intersect every line of travel diverging to the West from the great commercial cities of the sea-board.

The following are some of the vast enterprises which have been undertaken to accomplish this great purpose, which have either been finished or are in such a state of progress as leave no doubt of their being brought to a successful issue within a few years:

First. The railroads connecting Portland, the commercial capital of Maine, with the British provinces, and through their public works, the St. Lawrence River and the lakes, with the Western States of the Union.

Second. The railroads from Boston westward, connecting at Albany with the roads of Central New York, and, by the more northern route, traversing New Hampshire and Vermont, continuing toward the West by the Ogdensburg Railroad, and bringing Montreal, the chief commercial city of Upper Canada, into communication with the capital of New England.

Third. The New York and Erie Railroad, extending from New York city to Lake Erie, and intended to form a part of a continuous line from the Hudson to the Mississippi—a project likely to be effected within the ensuing ten years.

Fourth. The Pennsylvania Central Railroad, from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, with numerous diverging branches, to points north and south of the general direction. This great route will reach St. Louis by a nearly due west course through Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The Pennsylvania section will be completed about the end of 1853.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Fifth. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, one of the most magnificent works of the day, passes from Baltimore, through Maryland and Virginia, to Wheeling, on the Ohio. At the latter point it will form a connection with the system of roads traversing the West and North-west.

Sixth. The roads proposed to be constructed under authority of Virginia, and already commenced, intended to establish communication between tide-water and the interior, and south-western parts of that State, and to continue the same through Tennessee to the Mississippi.

Seventh. The several lines of railroad from Charleston and Savannah, penetrating South Carolina and Georgia, concentrating in north-eastern Alabama, and reaching the level region of the Mississippi by the valley of the Tennessee River. These roads, by their western continuation, will intersect lines running to every important point between the mountains and the Mississippi River.

Eighth. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad, from the Mexican gulf to the mouth of the Ohio, and the Illinois Central Railroad to the lakes, a distance in a straight line of about 1,100 miles.

It will be seen at a glance that the leading idea in all these vast enterprises was to overcome the barrier presented by this chain of mountains, to a direct and unrestricted intercourse between the sea-board and the West, and to supply the want of those natural channels of commerce, navigable rivers, extending into the section we desire to reach. The enormous aggregate of expense of the numerous works specified above, undertaken with this one object, and their importance as public improvements, may be estimated from the following brief notice of the New York and Erie Railroad, which occupies the third place in our preceding enumeration: The longest continuous line of railroad in the world, and that in the construction of which the greatest natural obstacles have been overcome, is that which extends from the Hudson River, through the southern counties of New York, to Lake Erie. Its length is 469 miles, and it has branches of an additional length of 68 miles. Nearly its whole course is through a region of mountains. The bridges by which it is carried over the Delaware and Susquehanna rivers, and other streams, and the viaducts upon which it crosses the valleys that intercept its route, are among the noblest monuments of power and skill to be found in our country. The most of these works are of heavy masonry; but one of them is a wooden bridge, 187 feet in height, with one arch, the span of which is 275 feet. One of the viaducts is 1,200 feet long, and 110 feet high. The aggregate cost of this important work was $23,580,000, and the expense of construction was $42,333 per mile.

The following table presents, in a convenient form, some of the principal facts connected with railroads in the United States on the 1st January, 1852 and 1853.

Measures are in progress for establishing railroads in California, with the object of connecting San Francisco with some of the principal towns of the State; and no doubt, ere the lapse of many years, that important division of the Union will be in possession of as large a proportion of these facilities for travel and business as her population and resources require.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

From the brief sketch of American railroads should not be excluded some mention of several projects which are not only closely connected with the interests of the United States, but possess something of national importance. The first of these, in point of vastness of design, is the enterprise of building a railroad from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean. The routes proposed in this great work are almost as numerous as the persons who claim the merit of having first suggested and brought forward the scheme of thus completing the chain of railroad connection between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the Union. No scientific survey of any route west of the frontier of Missouri has been made, but it is not probable that any could be found that would bring the line of travel between the Mississippi and the ocean within the limit of 1,600 miles.

The natural obstacles to be overcome are the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada, the deserts between the Missouri and the former chain, and those of the great basin, the flying sands, and the want of timber. Further explorations may lead to the discovery of means to overcome these difficulties. Should the cost not exceed the average of Western roads, it would form no objection to the enterprise, since it would be only about $32,000,000, or only twenty-five per cent. more than has been expended upon the Erie Railroad—less than fifty per cent. greater than the aggregate expenditure upon the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and not two-thirds of that incurred by the State of Massachusetts on her railroads. The only question, then, affecting the probability of the construction of the Pacific Railroad is that of practicability.

This can only be determined by thorough surveys of some or all of the routes proposed, from the valley of the Rio Grande, the Arkansas, the Missouri, and the Upper Mississippi. If this road were completed, and the route continued westward by steamship to Calcutta, it would reduce the time required for the circuit of the globe, by the American overland route, to 93 days, as follows: from New York to San Francisco, 4 days; to Hong-Kong, 25 days; to Calcutta, 6 days; to Bombay, 13 days; to England, 35 days; to New York, 10 days. Total, 93 days.

Another project for connecting, by the means of cheap and rapid conveyance, the two coasts of our confederacy, which deserves, as it has received, very great attention, is the proposition to build a railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, in Mexico. Its feasibility is established. The length of the road, according to the report of the surveyors, will be 166 miles from sea to sea; but only about 80 miles from the head of navigable water on either side.

The cost of the road, with all the necessary equipments, station-houses, etc., is estimated at $7,848,000. The time expected to be required for its construction is three years. With this connecting link of communication completed, the voyage from New Orleans to San Francisco will be performed in eight or nine days.

For the purpose of comparison, the subjoined statement has been prepared, showing the number of miles of railroads, with their costs, according to the most generally received authorities in all the countries of Europe in which those improvements have been introduced:

COUNTRIES.	Miles.	Aggregate cost.	Cost p. mile.
Great Britain and Ireland.....	6,390	$1,213,000,000	$177,000
German States, including Prussia and Austria.....	5,332	325,875,000	61,000
France.....	1,018	238,905,000	254,000
Belgium.....	532	46,288,000	49,000
Russia.....	200	15,000,000	75,000
Italy.....	170	15,000,000	85,000
	14,142	1,859,068,000	131,300

By these statistics it is made to appear that the average cost of European railroads was $131,300 per mile. The average cost of American railroads completed previous to the commencement of the present year was $34,307 per mile. The excess of expenditure, therefore, in the construction of European roads over those in the United States, is $95,993 per mile, or about 280 per cent.; but it may be remarked that the average cost of construction in the United States of all the roads does not exceed $27,300 per mile; so that the actual excess is $103,000 per mile.

The foregoing statements develop the striking fact that the United States possess an extent of railroad nearly equal to that of the rest of the world combined; and, at our present rate of progression, we are likely, in a few years, far to exceed it.

ALABAMA river, Ala.: is formed by the union of the Coosa and Tallapoosa, and flowing S. W., it unites with Tombigbee r., forming Mobile r., 48 m. above Mobile Bay. It affords, in connection with its branches, a great line of interior navigation.

THE STATE OF ALABAMA.

ALABAMA is bounded on the north by Tennessee, on the east by Georgia and Florida, on the south by Florida and the Gulf of Mexico, and on the west by Mississippi, and extends generally between latitudes 31° and 35° north, and longitudes 85° 10' and 88° 31' west from Greenwich, or 8° 05' and 11° 29' from Washington; a narrow strip, however, extends south beyond the main body of the State between Florida and Mississippi, reaching the Gulf of Mexico, which it strikes in about 30° 10'. Its length from north to south, excluding the strip of land above mentioned, is 223 miles, and its breadth varies from 146 miles on the north line to 210 on the south line; and the area of the State is 50,722 square miles.

The north-eastern part of Alabama, being traversed by several ridges of the Alleghanies, which terminate in this State, is decidedly mountainous, but presents nowhere any considerable elevations. South of this mountain region the surface has a general declivity toward the Gulf of Mexico, first descending gradually from mountains to high hills, and then sinking to a vast plain, scarcely broken except by gentle swells; and the more southern portion is a dead level, but little above the water surface of the ocean. The southern half of the State consists of extensive prairies and pine-barrens, interspersed with alluvial river bottoms of great fertility; and the lands of the centre and north are generally covered with a good if not a very rich and productive soil. In the valley of the Tennessee, which occupies so large an area in the northern part of the State, alluvion is the prevailing formation; and the rich bottom-lands of this region are extensive, and form one of the richest agricultural districts within the limits of the State.

With the exception of the Tennessee, which takes a circular sweep through Northern Alabama, but receives no considerable tributary on its southern side, all the rivers flow into the Gulf of Mexico; nearly the whole surface, indeed, is drained into one single channel, the Mobile River, which by several large arms gathers up the waters of the whole southern slope, except those of a comparatively small tract in the south-east. The Chattahoochee although a large stream, and washing the eastern border for more than a hundred miles, receives only a few inconsiderable streams from this State; and the Choctawhatchee, Conecuh, and Perdido are, in point of size, secondary rivers. The Mobile, the great river of Alabama, is formed by the junction of two large rivers, the Alabama and Tombigbee, 50 miles above Mobile Bay. A few miles below its junction it gives out a large branch, called the Tensaw, which receives also an arm from the Alabama, and reaches Mobile Bay at Blakely. The Tombigbee, or Western Branch of the Mobile, is formed by the confluence of two large streams, the Tombigbee Proper from Mississippi, and the Black Warrior from Northern Alabama. It admits vessels drawing five or six feet of water to St. Stephens, 93 miles from the bay, and steamboats to Tuscaloosa, on the Black Warrior, 285 miles, and to Columbus, on the Tombigbee Proper, in Mississippi, about 300 miles. The length of this river, by its tortuous channel, is about 450 miles, and it is boatable almost to its sources. The Alabama, or Eastern Branch, is navigable for vessels of six feet draft to Claiborne, 60 miles above its junction with the Tombigbee; 150 miles farther, to the mouth of the Cahawba, it has four or five feet of water, and to the junction of the Coosa and Tallapoosa, of which it is formed, it has in the shallowest parts three feet of water. Steamboats ascend it to Montgomery, 300 miles by the course of the river, and even to Wetumpka, on the Coosa, several miles above. The Coosa and Tallapoosa both have their rise in Georgia. The navigation of all these rivers, however, is interrupted during the season of low water in the summer months, and at best affords only a precarious means of transport for merchandise.

The sea-coast of Alabama extends only from the Perdido to the western line of the State, a distance of some 60 miles, but it contains Mobile Bay, one of the largest and deepest basins on the Gulf, and the great outlet of the navigable waters of the State. This fine sheet of water is about 30 miles long, and from three to 18 miles broad, and the main entrance has 15 feet of water at low tide, but vessels of more than eight or nine feet draft cannot approach nearer than 10 or 11 miles from Mobile City, except at high water. Smaller vessels may go hence to New Orleans by an inland channel through Pascagoula Sound, a long, narrow lagoon, lying between a range of low sand-islands and the mainland. Perdido Bay, on the south-eastern edge of the State, is of little consequence to commerce, and is, moreover, difficult of access, on account of the sand-bars and islands which block its entrance to the sea.

Alabama has great mineral resources. The whole central region is underlain with vast beds of iron ore, or occupied by coal measures of great thickness and extent. The coal found here is of a highly bituminous character, and well adapted for steamboats and factories, and being in juxtaposition with the iron ores, will greatly facilitate the progress of mining industry. The country in this region is also well wooded, fertile, and easily attained from all directions, and in the succession of events must eventually become of great importance to the whole South. Bloomeries and rolling mills, with other establishments for manufacturing iron, have already been erected, and the products of these have become both extensive and valuable. The principal seats of these operations are on the Cahawba and Coosa rivers. Besides coal and iron, Alabama yields lead ore, manganese, several descriptions of ochres, limestone, and marbles, and in the north-eastern section gold in considerable quantities has been collected. Lead ore, or galena, is found in the limestone formation, chiefly in Benton County: it is a pure sulphuret and granular, closely attached to the rock, and passes it in irregular bunches. The carbonate is also found, and in its neighborhood there are veins of calx spar and sulphate of barytes. Manganese occurs also in the limestone region, and has been used in the manufacture of chloride of lime. The ochres occur chiefly near Bucksville, and the red ochre found here is sufficiently rich to be used as an ore of iron. The marbles found in this State occur most plentifully on the Cahawba, and many of the beds afford specimens of great beauty: some are gray, with red veins; others are red and yellow, and specimens with greenish veins are not uncommon. There is also a buff-colored marble, filled with organic remains, and beds of white crystalline marble, clouded with red, occur. Black marble is also abundant. The compactness and thickness of these formations are such as to elicit a favorable opinion of their value, and cause them to be looked upon with great interest in connection with the industrial resources of the State. The resources of Alabama, however, have never been thoroughly examined; but there can be little doubt, taking the present knowledge of its mineral deposits as an index, that the researches now being instituted, will result in further and more valuable disclosures of a vast wealth of mineral within its borders, and be the means of placing the State in the first rank of mineral-producing districts.

The soil, climate, and vegetation of Alabama vary with the position and elevation of its several parts. In the north, where mountain is the prevailing feature, the soil is but moderately fertile, but in the intervalles there is much that cannot be excelled. The climate is here moderate, and the vegetation hardy: it is the region of the cereals, and a fine grazing country. The central parts of this State, less elevated and undulating, are well watered, and in the river-bottoms the land is extremely rich and productive. The valley of the Alabama is one of the most fertile regions of the Union. In the south the climate is very warm, the soils rich, but with great exceptions, and the principal growths of a tropical character. The sugar-cane has been found to succeed well in the extreme southern strip between Florida and Mississippi, and indigo was formerly raised in considerable quantities; rice, also, grows well in the alluvial bottoms near the Gulf; but cotton, which thrives throughout the State, is the great agricultural staple. The natural growths and animals are in no way different from those of the neighboring States on the Gulf of Mexico. The most common of animals is the deer, and the country abounds in turkeys, partridges, geese, ducks, and various other species of smaller game; and fish in abundance may be taken in the rivers and bays.

Alabama was comprised within the limits of Georgia until 1802, when that State ceded her lands west of Chattoohocchee river to the United States; and in 1817 Alabama was separated from Mississippi, and erected into a Territory; in 1820 it was admitted into the Union as an independent State. In 1810 the population was scarcely 10,000, but since then its growth has been extremely rapid, there having been a constant tide of immigration, chiefly planters, from the Atlantic States. In 1820 it contained 127,901 inhabitants; in 1830, 309,527; in 1840, 590,756; and in 1850, 771,671, of which 426,507 were white persons, 2,272 free colored, and 342,892 slaves.

In 1850 the State was divided into two districts, the "Northern" and the "Southern." The Northern District comprised the counties of Benton, Blount, Cherokee, De Kalb, Fayette, Franklin, Hancock, Jackson, Jefferson, Lauderdale, Lawrence, Lewistown, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Morgan, St. Clair, and Walker; and the Southern District, the counties of Autauga, Baldwin, Barbour, Bibb, Butler, Chambers, Choctaw, Clarke, Coffee, Conecuh, Coosa, Covington, Dale, Dallas, Green, Henry, Lowndes, Macon, Marengo, Mobile, Monroe, Montgomery, Perry, Pike, Pickens, Randolph, Russell, Shelby, Sumter, Talladega, Tallapoosa, Tuscaloosa, Wilcox, and Washington. The 18 counties in the north contained 214,666 inhabitants, of which 151,090 were whites, 495 free colored, and 62,481 slaves; and the 34 counties in the south, 557,005, of which 274,817 were whites, 1,777 free colored, and 280,411 slaves. Deaf and dumb, in the whole State, 211; blind, 308; insane, 245, and idiotic, 505.

Alabama is principally engaged in agricultural pursuits; but it has also an increasing manufacturing interest, and a flourishing commerce. Its principal agricultural staples are cotton and sugar; and its chief manufactures are coarse cotton fabrics, iron, machinery, agricultural implements, carriages, &c. The statistics of its various interests in 1850 were as follows:

Occupied Lands, &c.—Improved lands, 4,435,614 acres, and unimproved, 7,702,067 acres, valued at $64,323,224. Number of farms, 41,964. Value of farming implements and machinery, $5,125,663.

Livestock.—Horses, 120,001; asses and mules, 59,595; milch cows, 227,201; working oxen, 66,961; other cattle, 433,263; sheep, 371,880; and swine, 1,904,540—valued at $21,690,112.

Products.—Wheat, 294,044 bushels; rye, 17,261; Indian corn, 28,754,043; oats, 2,955,697; barley, 3,958; buckwheat, 345; peas and beans, 892,701; Irish potatoes, 246,001; sweet potatoes, 5,475,204 bushels; rice, 2,311,252 pounds; tobacco, 164,990 pounds; ginned cotton, 564,429 bales of 400 pounds; hay, 82,655 tons; clover seed, 138 bushels, and other grass seed, 547; hops, 276 pounds; water-rotted hemp, 70 tons; flax, 3,541 pounds; flaxseed, 67 bushels; maple sugar, 643 pounds; cane sugar, 8,242 hogheads of 1,000 pounds; molasses, 58,428 gallons; wine, 220 gallons; value of products of orchard, $15,408, and of market-gardens, $34,821; beeswax and honey, 897,021 pounds; silk cocoons, 167 pounds; wool, 657,118 pounds; butter, 4,008,811, and cheese, 81,412 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered, $4,823,455. Home-made manufactures were valued at $1,934,120.

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested, $90,000,000; value of raw material, fuel, &c., consumed, $90,000,000; average number of hands employed, 00,000—males, 00,000, and females, 00,000; average monthly cost of male labor,

ALABAMA.

$800,000, and of female labor, $800,000; annual value of products, $800,000,000. The whole number of manufacturing establishments, producing to the value of $500 and upward annually, was 1,022—in the north, 341, and in the south, 681; and of these, 12 were cotton factories, using 5,208 bales of cotton; 10 were engaged in manufacturing castings, 3 in the manufacture of pig-iron, and 1 in that of wrought iron. Capital employed in cotton factories, $651,900; value of all raw material, $237,081; average number of hands—346 males, and 369 females; wages, per month—to males, $4,053, and to females, $2,946; value of products for the year, $382,260, the products being 3,081,000 yards sheeting, etc., and 790,000 lbs. yarn. Capital employed in cast-iron manufacture, $216,625; value of raw material, $102,085; hands employed, 212, at average wages $80 05 per month; castings made, 1,915 tons; value of all products, $271,126. The other departments of iron making—the manufactures of pig iron and wrought iron are comparatively insignificant; of the first, 522 tons were manufactured; and of the latter, 100 tons during the year. The remaining branches of the industrial pursuits of Alabama are generally such as are required in an agricultural country. In Mobile, and some of the larger interior towns, however, there are large mechanic and machine shops, carriage factories, etc.

Foreign Commerce and Navigation.—Exports.—Domestic produce, in American vessels, $4,601,515, and in foreign vessels, $5,943,343, or a total of $10,544,858. Imports—in American vessels, $108,134, and in foreign vessels, $757,223, or a total of $865,357. Shipping employed in the foreign carrying trade: Entrances, 152 vessels, and 96,020 tons, with crews of 4,284 men, and 217 boys; of which, 40 vessels and 11,914 tons, with crews of 431 men and 13 boys, American; and, Clearances, 182 vessels, and 112,985 tons, with crews of 4,639 men and 231 boys—of which, 76 vessels, and 32,268 tons, with crews of 933 men and 41 boys, American. Mobile is the only port open to the foreign trade. Shipping owned within the state, 24,157 tons—of which, 1,405 tons, is registered “permanent,” and 5,993 tons registered “temporary;” 16,003 tons is enrolled and licensed “permanent,” and 751 tons is “licensed under 20 tons.” The shipping navigated by steam is 12,028 tons, chiefly employed on the rivers. During the year, three schooners of 113 tons were built. The following table will exhibit the movement of foreign commerce in this State, from 1818 to 1851:

Internal Trade and Communication.—The greater part of Alabama as yet depends on wagons over common earth roads, for the transportation of its productions and supplies; and those places distant from the rivers and railroads are consequently almost isolated from the commercial world. The river navigation, however, is extensive, in its various courses measuring at least 2,000 miles. The great body of the products of the State find their way to Mobile, the commercial emporium; some are shipped by the Chattahoochee, for Apalachicola, and some—but in a smaller degree—by Tennessee River, to the Ohio, whence they are conveyed to New Orleans by the Mississippi, or by way of the Illinois Canal and the great lakes to a northern market. The cotton crop, passing in these various channels, may be estimated at one seventh the whole by the Chattahoochee, one sixteenth by the Tennessee, and the remainder by the system of rivers centering at Mobile Bay. The progress of the State in building railroads is as yet limited; the great line from Mobile to the Ohio River is completed within Alabama, and is progressing in Mississippi; the Tusculumbia and Decatur Railroad, now merged into the Charleston and Memphis Railroad, crosses the State in the north; the Alabama and Tennessee River Railroad, 209 miles long, extends from Selma to Guntersville; the Montgomery and West Point Railroad is 86 miles long, and there are several other important lines chartered, and some in progress: these have been of comparatively small benefit as yet, but when opened for commerce, and their exterior connections built, the effect they will have in stimulating production and consumption, will be felt in every direction—the latent mineral wealth of the State will be disintombed, the fine cotton lands on the rivers will be entered and cultivated, mechanic trades will be demanded everywhere, and the whole country will experience a beneficial change in its material welfare. Besides these avenues of commerce, Alabama has two canals, the “Muscule Shoals Canal,” and the “Huntsville Canal;” the former 35½ miles long from Florence, along the north bank of the Tennessee, and designed to overcome the obstruction caused by the shoals; and the latter extending from Triana on the Tennessee, 16 miles, to Huntsville.

Banks.—In January, 1850, there was one bank in the State—the Bank of the State of Alabama—with branches at the principal points. Its aggregate condition, as published in the General Bank returns by the Federal Government, is exhibited in the following figures: Assets—loans and discounts, $2,116,591; stocks, $71,013; real estate, $152,601; other investments, $1,229,201; due by other banks, $923,209; notes of other banks, 16,029, and specie, $1,307,392; and Liabilities—capital, $1,500,000; circulation, $2,553,368; deposits, $1,216,319; due other banks, $20,740; and other liabilities, $395,124.

Government.—The Constitution provides that every white male citizen of the United States twenty-one years of age, a resident of the State one year, and in the county, city, or town three months next preceding, may vote for the election of all constitutional officers. The executive power is vested in a Governor, who is chosen by a plurality of votes for two years; he must be at least thirty years of age, a citizen of the United States, and have resided in the State four years. The General Assembly consists of a Senate and House of Representatives: the Senate of 33 members, elected for four years, one half biennially, and the House of 100 members, elected for two years. The qualifications extend only to age and residence. The Assembly meets in Montgomery on the second Monday in November every second year, commencing 1827. The Judiciary consists of a Supreme Court, with a Chief Justice and two associate Justices, a Reporter, Attorney General, and Clerk; a Court of Chancery, with separate chancellors for the three districts of the State; nine Circuit Courts, each with a Judge, Solicitor, etc.; County, or Probate Courts, etc. The Judges of the Supreme and Chancery Courts are elected by joint vote of both houses of the legislature for six years. The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction only, and holds its sessions at the capital, annually, on the first Monday of January and June, for the hearing and determining points of law taken by appeal or writ of error from the Chancery, Circuit, and Probate Courts. The volumes of reported decisions are 37 in number. For chancery legislation the State is divided into 3 Divisions and 37 Districts, in each of which at least one court is held annually. Circuit courts have jurisdiction in all civil and criminal cases in the State, and hold two sessions (spring and fall), in each county annually. In Mobile county criminal jurisdiction has been transferred to the Special City court of Mobile, which holds three terms each year, and has concurrent jurisdiction with the Circuit Courts, except in real actions. The judges of probate are also clerks of the court and registers of deeds for their respective counties.

Alabama, under the law regulating the distribution of Representatives to Congress, has a delegation of seven members. Finances.—On the 31st December, 1849, the foreign debt of the State amounted to $6,693,888 93, and the domestic debt to $1,845,220 99—total debt $8,539,109 97. The annual liabilities of the State are—interest on debt $418,627 70, and the estimated current expenses of the government $97,678—total $516,305 70. The immediate means of the treasury on the 1st Nov., 1849, were—balance from former dates $538,792 44, taxes for 1850 $487,987 48, and interest on $1,100,000 U. S. 6 per cent. stock owned by the State $66,000—total $1,092,779 92, from which deduct annual disbursements, and the balance will be $596,474 22, of which $483,016 is the amount of notes of the State bank in the treasury. The real balance then is $178,458 22, which sum is moreover liable for $60,000, appropriated for the rebuilding of the State House, burnt in Dec., 1849. The State has resources besides the U. S. stock, and the treasury balance above alluded to, amounting to $1,766,907 64, its interest in the State bank, etc., all which may be applied to the discharge of the public debt.

Religious Denominations.—The statistics of the principal denominations, according to their own returns in 1850, were as follows: Presbyterians, 85 churches, 52 ministers, and 4,280 members; Protestant Episcopal, 18 churches, 23 ministers, and 718 members; Methodist Episcopal, 573 ministers, and 48,091 members; Baptists, 516 churches, 302 ministers, and 36,421 members; Roman Catholics, 11 churches, 20 ministers, and 9,000 members, etc. The Protestant Episcopal Church is under the Bishop of Alabama, and the Roman Catholic Church under the Bishop of Mobile, the see of the latter including also West Florida. Besides these, the minor churches are all more or less in existence.

Education.—Alabama has not been unmindful of the education of its citizens, and has many highly efficient educational establishments. Besides its primary and common schools, academies, etc., which are comparatively numerous, there are the University of Alabama, at Tuscaloosa, founded in 1838; La Grange College, founded in 1830; Spring Hill College, founded in 1830; Howard College, at Marion, founded in 1841, and others of various distinction. The University had in 1850, 9 teachers, 107 alumni, of which 16 were ministers, and 91 students—and a library of 7,123 volumes; the college at La Grange had 6 teachers, 111 alumni, and 70 students—and a library of 3,700 volumes; the college at Spring Hill had 12 teachers and 70 students—and a library of 4,000; and Howard College had 5 teachers and 70 students—and a library of 2,450 volumes. At Marion is also located the Howard Theological Institution, under Baptist auspices, and there are Law and Medical Schools attached to the University.

Periodical Press.—The whole number of periodicals published in Alabama is 61, of which 21 are whig and 23 democratic in their policy, and 13 are devoted to literature, science, religion, etc.; 6 are issued daily, 4 tri-weekly, 1 semi-weekly, 49 weekly, and 1 semi-monthly. MONTGOMERY is the State capital.

ALACHUA county, Flor. Situate E. centrally, and contains about 1,900 sq. m. Surface varied, but mostly level, and drained by head sources of Santa Fé r. and other streams. There are several lakes in the S. and E. portions, which communicate with St. John's r. Soil highly congenial to all Southern staples. Farms 233; dwell. 274, and pop.—wh. 1,617, fr. col. 1, sl. 906—total, 2,524. Capital: Newnansville.

ALACHUA savannah, Flor.: situate N. W., in E. Flor., and comprises a fine savannah, about 50 m. in circumference, without a tree or bush, but encircled with hills, covered with forests and orange groves on a very rich soil. The ancient Alachua Indian town stood on the borders of this savannah, but the Indians removed on account of the unhealthiness of the locality.

ALBANY county, N. Y. Situate N. centrally on Hudson r., and contains 515 sq. m. Drained by Normanskill, Vlamskill, Haiwankrauskill, and Coeyman's cr.: the Mohawk lies on the N. border. Surface uneven—in some places hilly: soils mostly sandy, but near the rivers highly fertile. Iron, limestone, etc., abound, and there are sulphur springs. Farms 2,903; manuf. 393; dwell. 12,747, and pop.—wh. 92,110, fr. col. 1,169—total, 93,279. Capital: Albany. Public Works: Champlain Canal; Albany and Schenectady R. R.; Albany and Binghamton R. R.; extensive docks, etc.

ALBANY, p. city and cap. Albany co., N. Y., and legislative capital of the State of New York: on W. side Hudson r., 376 m. N. N. E. Washington, lat. 42° 39' 03" N., long. 3° 16' 59" E. from Washington, or 73° 44' 49" W. from Greenwich. Pop. 59,771. The portion of the city on the river is built on a low flat, but beyond this the surface rises rapidly to an elevation of about 200 feet. The older part of the town is irregularly laid out, and several of the streets are narrow. The newer portions, however, are spacious and handsome, and contain fine shops and dwelling-houses. The public buildings, except the Exchange, are located on the heights, and have a commanding position, overlooking the vicinity. Among these, the Capitol, State House, and City Hall, are the most conspicuous. The Capitol is a large stone building, 115 feet long and 90 broad, fronting east on a fine park. It contains accommodations for the Senate and Assembly, the State Library, and numerous apartments for the use of the government. The State House, a fine marble building, is situated on the E. side of the Park square, and accommodates the executive and administrative officers of the State; and the City Hall, an edifice of similar material, also on the same side of the Park, contains the municipal offices. The Exchange is a large granite building at the foot of State-street. The other public buildings are the Albany Academy, the Medical College, the State Normal School, and numerous benevolent and literary institutions. The old State House, on the S. side of State-street, is now used as a depository for the geological collection made by the State surveyors. The city contains between 60 and 70 churches, of various denominations, many of which are substantial and elegant structures; the streets are well lighted with gas, and water is supplied through iron pipes.

There are five daily papers issued in Albany, namely, the "Argus" (dem.), the "Evening Journal" (whig), the "Atlas" (dem.), the "State Register" (whig), and the "Express" (neutral); and the four first of these issue also weekly editions. The "Knickerbocker," the "Dutchman," and the "Freeholder," are issued weekly; these are neutral in politics, and devoted chiefly to general news and literature. All these papers are ably conducted, and enjoy a wide reputation.

The manufactures of Albany are extensive and various: it has numerous iron works, carriage factories, type foundries, oil-cloth factories, sawing and planing machines, making houses, and has long been famous for its breweries. The trade of the city is also large, and its commercial connections with the north and west give employment to thousands of its inhabitants, as merchants, store-keepers, laborers, etc.

Albany is the chief entrepot of a vast internal commerce: its situation for such a purpose is unsurpassed. The Hudson washes its shores, and it has connection by canal with Lake Champlain, a long line of interior counties, and with the Great West through Buffalo. Railroads also extend hence to all points, and collect and distribute many million dollars' worth of property annually. The railroads centering at Albany are the Hudson River R. E., the Harlem Extension R. R., the Western, from Boston, several others from the direction of Canada, the great northern chain extending to Buffalo, and a line is about being built to Birmingham, on the Susquehanna, which will open to the city the mineral treasures of Pennsylvania, and a large extent of fertile country intervening.

In the season of navigation, there are also several daily lines of steamers to and from New York, and on an average 3,000 or 4,000 persons are daily carried between the two places, while innumerable sloops, canal boats, and tow-boats transport millions of tons of merchandize and produce constituting the material of its vast commerce. Albany was originally a trading post of the Dutch, and dates as such from 1623. It was successively known as Beaverville and Wilhelmstadt; but after the capitulation, in 1664, it obtained the name of Albany, in honor of the Duke of York and Albany, the proprietary of the colony. In 1686 it was chartered as a city.

ALLEGANY BRIDGE, p. v., McKean co., Penn.: 129 m. N. W. Harrisburg.

ALLEGANY mountains (called also, APPALLACHIAN) constitute a long range, varying from 50 to 200 m. in breadth, and extend from Catskill Mountain in N. York, through Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, N. Carolina, into Alabama. Their course is N. E. and S. W., parallel with the Atlantic Ocean, at a distance from it of from 60 to 150 m. These mountains consist of a number of parallel ridges, known as the Blue Ridge, Laurel Mountain, Cumberland Mountain, etc., and vary in elevation from 600 to 2,500 feet, forming the great watershed between the Atlantic slope and the Mississippi valley. Extensive valleys or glades lie between the several ridges, in which is found much fine land, although generally of a rough and rugged aspect. They abound in rocks and mineral deposits, as iron, coal, etc.; and at their eastern base considerable gold has been collected.

ALLEGANY river: a large stream, forming one of the great constituents of the Ohio r.: it rises on the W. side of the Alleghany mts. in Pennsylvania, about 30 m. E. of Lake Erie, and, running first N. W., into New York, then bending S. W., re-entering Pennsylvania, through which it has a devious course to Pittsburg, where it is joined by Monongahela r., and the united streams constitute the Ohio. The Alleghany has a steady current, and is navigable for boats to Hamilton, 260 m. above Pittsburg. Its banks are fertile, and for about 150 m. from the junction have ridges of white oaks and chestnuts, with some patches of poor pitch pines, interspersed with tracts of good land and low meadow. The waters are always clear and limpid, whatever may be the state of the weather.

ALLEMAKKE county, Ia. Situate in N. E. corner, and contains 720 sq. m. Drained by Upper Iowa, Yellow, and other rivers, tributaries of the Mississippi, which forms the E. border. Farms 2; dwell. 152, and pop. 777. Capital: Lansing.

ALLEMANCE county, N. Car. Situate N. middle, and contains 576 sq. m. Watered by Haw r. and its creeks, Great Allamance, etc. Surface pleasantly varied, and soils of average fertility. Wheat, corn, oats, tobacco, and cotton are the chief products. Farms 923; manuf. 38; dwell. 1,516, and pop.—wh. 7,924, fr. col. 824, sl. 3,196—total, 11,444. Capital: Graham.

ALLEMANCE, p. v., Guilford co., N. Car.: on Great Allamance cr., 66 m. W. Raleigh.

ALLEN county, Ind. Situate N. E., and contains 672 sq. m. The county is well watered, and has numerous fine mill-streams. Little r. and Abote r. rise in the W., and, uniting, fall into the Wabash; and the St. Joseph's and St. Mary's, from Ohio, unite at Fort Wayne, and form the Maumee, which falls into Lake Erie. These were formerly navigable at high water, but are now only used for milling. Bee cr., Crooked cr., and Cedar cr., afford also considerable power. Surface level, and well timbered. Soils excellent; near the streams a sandy loam, and in the interior, clay, intermixed with marl. In the N. W. are numerous oak-openings, or barrens. Farms 1,300; manuf. 127; dwell. 3,097, and pop.—wh. 16,817, fr. col. 102—total, 16,919. Capital: Fort Wayne. Public Works: Wabash and Erie Canal: several railroads are projected.

ALLEN county, Ky. Situate S. centrally, and contains 510 sq. m. Drained by numerous tributaries of Green r., which bounds it on the N. Surface level or undulating, and soils of average fertility. ANDROSCOGGIN river, Me.: is formed by the junction of Magalloway r., and the outlet of Lake Umbagog, in New Hamp., in which State it has a S. course of about 40 m. After entering Maine, it takes a serpentine course, first, E., then S., and finally E., for about 100 m., when it runs over Pejepskeag Falls, and joins the Kennebec at Merry-meeting Bay, 6 m. above Bath, and 18 m. from the sea: its whole course is about 150 m. The confluent streams from this bay is sometimes called the Sagadahock.

ANGELICA, t., p. v., and cap. Alleghany co., N. Y.: on Angelica cr. of Genesee r., 221 m. W. by S. Albany. It contains the county buildings, a bank, the "Alleghany County Bank," and several churches; and a newspaper, the "Angelica Reporter," is issued weekly. Pop. 1,592.

ANGELINA county, Tex. Situate E. between Neches and Angelina rivers, and contains about 1,320 sq. m. Drained by Caney, King's, Buck, Shawnee, and other creeks of the Neches, and by Durazno, Poffer, and others of Angelina r. Surface beautifully varied—the watershed running parallel and near to Angelina r. Soils fertile, and produce cotton and sugar largely. Farms 88; dwell. 166, and pop.—wh. 945, fr. col. 24, sl. 196—total, 1,165. Capital: Marion.

ANNAPOLIS CITY, port of entry and p. o.; co. seat, Anne Arundel co., and cap. of the State of Maryland; on W. side of Severn r., 3 m. from its entrance into Chesapeake Bay, and distant 38 m. E. N. E. of Washington, D. C. Lat. 38° 58' 50" N., long. 76° 29' 26" W., from Greenwich, 0° 32' 40" E. from Washington. In 1530 the population was 2,623, in 1540 2,792, and in 1850 3,011—wh. 1,774, fr. col. 585, and sl. 652. The government removed from St. Mary's, the old capital, to Annapolis, then called Providence, 1689. Annapolis is regularly laid out, its streets diverging from the State House and Episcopal church, as from two principal centres. The State House is a substantial building; in this the old Congress held some of its sessions, and the Senate Chamber, in which Washington resigned his commission to that august body, has been preserved unaltered. The State library contains about 25,000 volumes. The city has a market-house, a bank (the Farmer's Bank of Maryland), a theatre, and about 420 dwellings, many of which are elegant and spacious. St. John's College, formerly a branch of the University, is located here; it was founded in 1784, and in 1850 had 6 professors, 80 students, 150 alumni, 8 of whom were ministers, and a library containing 3,292 volumes. The public press consists of two newspapers, the "Maryland Republican," and the "Free Press," issued weekly, together circulating 1,200 copies. Shipping owned in the collection district of Annapolis, on the 1st June, 1850, was 2,323 tons, of which 336 was navigated by steam power. Some small manufactures are carried on, and the coasting trade hence is on a liberal scale. The city communicates with the interior lines of travel by the Annapolis and Elkridge R. R., 21 m. in length, diverging from it in a N. W. direction to a junction with the Washington Branch R. R., at a point 18 m. from Baltimore, 22 m. from Washington.

It is the seat of the University of Michigan, and an important point of internal trade. There is a bank here; and two newspapers, the "Michigan Argus" and the "Washtenaw Whig," are issued weekly. Pop. 4,570.

ANNE ARUNDEL county, Md. Situate W. shore, and contains 678 sq. m. Drained by creeks running to Patapsco, Severn, and West rivers. Surface is generally undulating, with some broken spots and swamps. Soils vary from sandy to clayey loam; iron, copper, etc., abundant, and marl found in several parts. Tobacco is largely grown—in fact, is the principal staple. Farms 1,295; manuf. 156; dwell. 3,712, and pop.—wh. 16,542, fr. col. 4,603, sl. 11,249—total, 32,393. Capital: Annapolis. Public Works: Annapolis and Elkridge R. R. In 1851 Howard co. was erected from Anne Arundel.

ARKANSAS county, Ark. Situate E. on Arkansas r., near its entrance into the Mississippi r., and contains 960 sq. m. Drained by a number of creeks, tributaries of Arkansas r., and of White r., which latter forms its N. E. border. Surface generally level, low, and subject to inundation. Westward it rises somewhat, and here commences "Grand Prairie," a fine, fertile country. Farms 153; dwell. 328, and pop.—wh. 1,695, fr. col. 12, sl. 1,538—total, 3,245. Capital: Arkansas Post.

ARKANSAS Post, p. v. and cap. Arkansas co., Ark.: on the N. side of Arkansas r., 52 m. from its confluence with Mississippi r. It is the oldest town in the State, having been founded by the French in 1685.

ARKANSAS river: one of the principal tributaries of the Mississippi r. It rises in the Rocky mts., near the sources of the Del Norte, about lat. 40° N., and falls into the Mississippi, 400 m. above Red r., in lat. 33° 40'. Its whole length is 2,170 m., of which 1,990 are navigable. It surpasses all the rivers of the middle region of the U. S. in the gracefulness and regularity of its windings, and the beauty and luxuriance of the cotton-wood groves that adorn its banks. In spring floods, steamboats can ascend it nearly to its source: the channel is broad, and the navigation is safe, unobstructed by rocks, shoals, or rapids. The shores, as far W. as Little Rock, are unhealthy, large tracts on both sides being covered with lakes and stagnant pools. The country is a dead level, and there the drainage is imperfect. On the Great Prairie, that commences immediately above the port, and extends for 90 m. up the country, the climate becomes more healthy, and this tract is thoroughly ventilated; but in the closely-wooded bottoms the air is heavy and inelastic, and the mosquitos very troublesome. Still further up, the climate and country improve. Near the sources of the river, silver has been found; and the soil of the districts through which the river flows is so saturated with salt, that the waters are strongly impregnated and rendered unfit for drinking. Independent of the too saline quality of the water, the vast proportion of red mold which is carried away by the current, produces a similar disqualifying effect as to its uses for general purposes. Arkansas River has been called the "Paradise of Savages," from the number of wild animals that are continually wandering along its banks.

ARKANSAS (Little) river: a tributary of Arkansas r. It rises in the deep sand alluvial district, and crosses the traders' route from Missouri to Santa Fé, and falls into the Arkansas Proper, 1,700 m. from its junction with the Mississippi r., in lat. 32° 30' N., and long. 95° W.

THE STATE OF ARKANSAS.

ARKANSAS is bounded on the north by Missouri, on the east by Tennessee and Mississippi, on the south by Louisiana, and on the west by the Indian Territory and Texas; and extends generally between the latitudes 33° and 36° 30' north, and the longitudes 89° 30' and 94° 30' west from Greenwich, or 12° 25' and 17° 25' west from Washington. Its length from north to south is 242 miles, and its breadth from east to west varies from 170 miles on the south line to 258 miles on the 36th parallel, where it is widest. The area of the State is 52,198 square miles.

The surface of Arkansas presents great variations in its configuration. Along the Mississippi River, which demarks its boundary on the east, and for 30 to 50 miles inland, the country is low and widely interspersed with lakes and swamps, and with inconsiderable exceptions, is annually overflowed by the floods of the Mississippi, Arkansas, and St. Francis.

In regard to the country west of the Mississippi, says Col. Long, it is proper to observe, that the broad valley of the Lower Mississippi, which is terminated to the north by the hilly country, connected with a continuous rocky bar, or reef, traversing the beds both of the Mississippi and the Ohio, about 12 miles above their junction, and denominated the Grand Chain of those rivers respectively, and which stretches southward, interrupted by a single hill, or ridge, elevated more than a few feet above the reach of the highest floods; that this entire valley region, once probably an arm or estuary of the ocean, and inhabited by the monsters of the deep, but long since reclaimed by the immense alluvion precipitated over the Grand Chain, in cataracts incomparably more grand and stupendous than that of Niagara, and borne thither on the backs of countless floods, is one continued and almost boundless flat, broken only by a multiplicity of water-courses, lagoons, and bayous, some of them tributary to the Mississippi, and others supplied from it, and exhibits an aspect variegated rather than embellished by the inequalities just mentioned, together with countless swamps, slashes, stagnant pools, etc. Across this valley there are as yet no passes by land secure from frequent and protracted interruptions, occasioned by overflows from the rivers by which it is traversed, nor is there any encouraging prospect that roads can be hereafter constructed to any tolerable advantage, except in a very few instances.

The country through which the St. Francis River passes is one continuous swamp. The surface presents, in ordinary times, an alternating appearance of lakes, bayous, cypress lands, and marshy ground: the lakes free from any growth of timber, except of cypress, growing in the water close to the banks, and the bayous, also free from timber, but frequently lying in broad and deep valleys, wooded not less thickly than the high ground, and containing comparatively little undergrowth. The valleys are in many cases inundated to the depth of 15 or 20 feet, or even more. The ponds are mostly filled with very large cypress trees, growing in the water, where its depth does not exceed 3 or 4 feet, except in time of overflow. The marshy ground is filled with trees of immense size, principally gum and sycamore, in the lower places, and white oak and hickory in those that are a little higher and dryer, having occasionally brakes of cane very thickly set, and frequently rising to the height of 20 and 30 feet, and of proportionate diameter.

Farther west the surface rises, and toward the centre of the State becomes moderately hilly, and farther west still it rises into the Ozark Mountains. There are numerous and extensive prairies interspersed throughout, but much of the land is well wooded, and in many places it is covered with a heavy forest.

Of the highlands that have been called the Ozark or Masserne Mountains, our knowledge is very imperfect. They consist of several low ridges, irregular in their direction, and seldom rising to an elevation of more than 1,500 or 2,000 feet. They appear to be composed chiefly of secondary rocks, limestones, clay slates, and sandstones, traversed in many places by dykes of greenstone, granite, and sienite. Those portions of this region which have been examined are found to be rich in metallic minerals, of which iron and lead, copper and zinc exist in great profusion. Coal and salt also abound; and there are valuable thermal and sulphurous springs. The Hot Springs of the Washita are remarkable for their high temperature, but are not powerfully impregnated with any mineral substances; they burst forth in great numbers and volume in a small valley lying between two lofty ridges of sandstone, and vary in temperature from 105° to 151° Fahr. There are said to be more than seventy of these springs, several rising from the bed of a small stream which flows through the valley, and others issuing from the bounding ridges, at various heights. The Washita oolites, or novaculites, so much esteemed, are found in this region.

The climate of Arkansas is temperate, but subject to sudden and frequent variations; and the whole country is exposed to the effect of the cold north winds which render the central portions of the United States so cheerless in the winter season. The same winds traverse southward to the equator, and are known in the Gulf of Mexico as the "northers," the terror of seamen navigating that sea. Yet in the spring, summer, and fall the seasons are highly propitious to agriculture, and here cotton, Indian corn, and, in fact, all the great staples of the country find the climate highly congenial. The soils vary from the most sterile to the most fertile, and on the margins of all the rivers the productiveness is unbounded. On most of these the soil is a rich alluvion deposited from the washings of the floods, deep and wide, covering millions of acres. Back from the rivers the soil becomes more and more sterile, and in many parts it is unfit for culture, either from scarcity of water or from metallic impregnation. The principal growths are pines, cypresses, sycamores, and oaks, according to the formation, and on the prairies, which are extensive, is that rank grass for which this description of land is so famous. On the whole, Arkansas has many advantages for agriculture, and it has many disadvantages. Where the latter, however, exist they are fully compensated for by the abundance of its minerals. It is also well stocked with wild animals, as the buffalo, deer, elk, beaver, otter, rabbit, raccoon, wild cat, catamount, wolf, bear, etc., which are valuable for their skins, and there is also a plentiful supply of wild turkeys, geese, quails, and other species of birds.

The State is traversed or washed by several of the largest rivers in America. The Mississippi bathes its eastern front for more than 350 miles by its windings, but affords no sites suitable for large towns in the present condition of the country. The Arkansas, one of the largest tributaries of the Mississippi, traverses the whole breadth of the State through its centre by a very tortuous course of about 1,530 miles, and is navigable during the greater part of the year far above its western limits. The Red River flows through the south-western corner, which is thus rendered accessible to steamboats. All the other rivers, some of which are of great magnitude, empty themselves into these three, affording navigable facilities to almost every quarter of the State. The St. Francis is a large and full river, rising in the eastern highlands of Missouri. Its channel, however, is much obstructed by numerous rafts or jams of fallen trees, and above and below the northern boundary its waters are dispersed in such a manner as to render the navigation intricate and difficult. The "Spread," as it is called by the inhabitants, extends for the space of about 50 miles, with a width in some parts of 20 miles, and is attributed to the earthquake of 1811, at which time a large tract of country sunk considerably below its former level, and the waters of the rivers were dissipated in numerous lakes and branches. The White River has its sources in the south-western part of the State, and passes into Missouri, whence it soon returns, reaching the Mississippi in a general south-easterly course. Its length is not less than 600 miles; and although at present it is choked up in many places by accumulations of drift-wood, steamboats ascend it as far as Balerville, 200 miles, and on the removal of these obstructions will be able to ascend it 200 miles farther. The White River receives several large tributaries from Missouri, of which the Big Black, a navigable stream, is the principal; the Cache and Little Red River have their courses wholly within this State. The Arkansas receives no considerable tributary. The Washita, a noble river running through a fertile and beautiful region, drains nearly the whole southern part of the State: rising near the western border, it flows nearly parallel with the White River and the Arkansas, first east, then south-east, and is navigable upward of 350 miles from its mouth. The Little Missouri, the Saline, the Bayou Bartholomew, the Bayou Beuff, and the Bayou Maçon, are its principal tributaries.

Arkansas formed a part of French Louisiana, and subsequently and until 1819, a portion of Missouri Territory. At the latter date it was erected into a separate territory, under its present name. In 1836 it was admitted into the Union as an independent State. The progress of its population was comparatively slow from 1820 to 1840; but since—as shown by the last census—the progress compares well with the most progressive of the States. In 1800 it contained only 1,052 inhabitants, chiefly settled near the mouth of the Arkansas River, and consisting of Frenchmen, whose progenitors settled Arkansas Post, the oldest white settlement of the country. In 1820 the population was 14,273; in 1830, 30,388; in 1840, 97,574, and in 1850, 209,639, of which 162,068 were white persons, 589 free colored persons, and 46,982 slaves. Deaf and dumb, 89; blind, 51; insane, 63; and idiotic, 102. The State was, at the latter date, divided into 51 counties, as follows: Arkansas, Ashley, Benton, Bradley, Carroll, Chicot, Clark, Conway, Crawford, Crittenden, Dallas, Desha, Drew, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Hempstead, Hot Springs, Independence, Izard, Jackson, Jefferson, Johnson, Lafayette, Lawrence, Madison, Marion, Mississippi, Monroe, Montgomery, Newton, Perry, Phillips, Pike, Poinsett, Polk, Pope, Prairie, Pulaski, Randolph, St. Francis, Saline, Scott, Searcy, Sevier, Union, Van Buren, Washington, Washita, White, and Yell.

Arkansas is almost wholly occupied in agricultural pursuits; its manufactures are merely in their inception, whether as to diversity or number of establishments; nor has it the advantage of a seaward commerce. The statistics afforded by the census of 1850, and other official reports, exhibit the condition of the State to be as follows:

Live Stock.—Horses, 60,197; asses and mules, 41,559; milch cows, 93,151; working oxen, 34,239; other cattle, 165,320; sheep, 91,256; swine, 836,727—valued at $6,647,969.

Products.—Wheat, 199,639 bushels; rye, 8,047; Indian corn, 8,593,939; oats, 656,138; barley, 177; buckwheat, 175; peas and beans, 285,735; Irish potatoes, 193,832; sweet potatoes, 788,149 bushels; rice, 63,179 pounds; tobacco, 218,936 pounds; ginned cotton, 65,346 bales of 400 pounds; hay, 3,977 tons; clover seed, 90 bushels, and other grass seed, 436; hops, 157 pounds; water-rotted hemp, 15 tons; flax, 12,291 pounds; faxseed, 321 bushels; maple sugar, 9,330 pounds; molasses,

ARKANSAS

18 gallons; wine, 85 gallons; value of products of orchards, $40,141, and of market-garden products, $17,150; beeswax and honey, 192,338 pounds; silk cocoons, 38 pounds; wool, 182,595 pounds; butter, 1,584,239, and cheese, 30,958 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered, $1,162,918. Home-made manufactures were valued at $633,217.

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested, $0,000,000; value of raw material, fuel, etc., consumed, $000,000; average number of hands employed, 0,000; males, 0,000, and females, 000; average monthly cost of male labor, $00,000, and of female labor, $0,000; annual value of products, $000,000. The whole number of manufacturing establishments, producing to the value of $500 and upward annually, was 271; and of these three were cotton factories, employing a capital of $16,500, and using 170 bales of cotton annually, valued at $8,975; hands employed, 13 males and 15 females; entire monthly cost of male labor, $190, and of female labor, $106; annual product, 81,200 pounds yarn, valued at $16,637. The remaining and most numerous of the industrial pursuits of Arkansas, are those incident to all agricultural States, or such as are immediately needed, as carriage-makers, blacksmiths, tanners, etc. The distribution of manufactures in this State is very unequal; of the counties, 15 have no manufacturing establishments, 17 have less than five, 7 have five and less than ten, 7 have ten and less than fifteen, 2 have fifteen and less than twenty, and 3 have twenty and upward.

Commerce, Internal Communication, etc.—Arkansas has no direct intercourse with foreign countries. Its export staples are carried to New Orleans for shipment, and most of its supplies are drawn from the same quarter. On all the great rivers steamboats ply regularly, and in sufficient numbers for the present wants of the population. Few of the roads are good, being chiefly earth tracks, almost impassable in wet weather. No railroads exist throughout the State, but there are several projected, and the spirit of enterprise appears to be alive on the subject. The initial point of the system projected is Helena, on the Mississippi, whence a direct line will be built to Little Rock, the capital, with an extension from that point to the Red River to meet the Texas roads pointing east, and another extension by way of Van Buren and Fort Smith, to be ultimately carried into the Indian territory, this latter being a part and parcel of the Great Southern Pacific Railroad. From these trunk lines branches will be built tapping the principal valleys, and giving to each section of the State facilities of direct railroad communication with the Mississippi rivers, and New Orleans the natural outlet of Arkansas products; a railroad is also projected from the main trunk west of White River northward through the fine agricultural and mineral region of Northern Arkansas and Southern Missouri.

Banks.—“No bank or banking institution shall be hereafter (1847) incorporated or established in this State.” None are now in operation, and the old “State Bank” has for some time been in liquidation.

Government.—In accordance with the State Constitution, adopted 4th January, 1830, every free white male citizen of the United States, 21 years old, and a citizen of Arkansas for six months next before the election, may vote in the district or county in which he resides. The Legislature consists of a Senate of 25 members, and a House of Representatives of 75 members. Senators must be at least 30 years of age, inhabitants of the State for one year before the election, and of the district at the time, and are chosen for four years. Representatives must be at least 25 years of age, resident in their counties, and are chosen for two years. The governor is elected by a plurality of votes; he must be 30 years of age, a native born citizen of the United States, and have resided in the State four years, and is chosen for four years (but is not eligible more than eight in any twelve years). His veto to any bill passed is negated by a subsequent majority vote of each house. In case of his disability or death, first the President of the Senate, and after him the Speaker of the Representatives, becomes governor to the end of the term. The Secretary of State, auditor, and treasurer, are elected by joint vote of the two houses. The Legislature meets at the Capital biennially.

Arkansas, under the law regulating the distribution of Representatives to Congress, has a delegation of two members. The judiciary consists of a Supreme Court, which has a chief and two associate justices, an attorney, clerk, and reporter; six circuit courts, each with a judge and attorney, and county courts, etc. The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction only, except in particular cases pointed out by the Constitution. It holds two terms annually, in April and October, at the seat of government. The justices are elected by the General Assembly, by joint ballot, for eight years. Circuit courts have original jurisdiction over all criminal cases not expressly provided for otherwise by law, and exclusive original jurisdiction of all crimes amounting to felony at common law; and original jurisdiction of all civil cases which are not cognizable before justices of the peace; and in all matters of contract where the sum in controversy is over $100. Two terms are held annually in each circuit. The judges and prosecuting attorneys are elected by the people, the former for four years, and the latter for two years. The justices of the peace in each county form a county court, and have exclusive jurisdiction in civil cases below $100. The justices are elected in towns for two years.

Finances.—The whole revenue for the biennial period 1849-50, amounted to $329,615 54, and the whole amount received into the treasury from all sources, was $495,194 84. The total paid out amounted to $433,975 08, leaving a balance of various accounts of $61,219 76. The State debt consists of bonds issued to the State Bank, and which are unredeemed; these consist of 6 per cents., amounting to $936,000, due 1868, and accumulated interest thereon, $519,450; and 5 per cents., $39,000, due 1887, and interest, $17,062 50—or a total of debt and interest, $1,506,562 50, on which the annual accruing interest is $90,131 80. The total value of taxable property in the State in 1850, was $84,995,855, on which in that year a tax of $93,540 was levied.

Religious Denominations.—The principal denominations in this State, according to statistics published by their own bodies in 1850, exhibited the following statements of their relative strength: Baptists, 6 associations, 78 churches, 49 ministers, and 2,509 members; Methodists, 60 traveling, 4 superannuated, and 153 local preachers, and 12,151 members; Roman Catholic, 7 churches, and 12 other stations, 6 ministers, and about 3,000 members; Protestant Episcopal, 2 clergy. The Roman Catholics are under the Bishop of Little Rock, and the Protestant Episcopalians under the missionary Bishop of Arkansas. The Presbyterians are numerous, but in consequence of the statistics of this denomination being included in synods, not co-extensive with the State, it is impossible to assess the apportionment due to Arkansas separately.

Schools and Education.—Although Arkansas has had advantages to foster education equal to any others of the new States, her improvident legislators have not improved them. There are but few common schools in the State. In each township the 16th section is given by Congress for the support of schools, and the revenue arising from leases of salt springs, and from estrays sold, forms part of the school fund. There are academies and high schools in Little Rock, Fayetteville, Washington, Camden, and some other places. There is no State College, although Congress granted to the State seventy-two sections of land (2,592 acres) for the purpose of founding an institution of learning; this, by a law of the Legislature of 1849, and in utter defiance of the intentions of Congress, was distributed among the counties. The only effort to establish a college has been made by the Roman Catholics. In 1850 the Legislature granted them a charter for the College of St. Andrews, near Fort Smith, in Crawford county. The college has a president and five professors, and its course of studies embraces all the branches taught in the best institutions. The Ecclesiastical Seminary is located on the college grounds, and is considered one of the finest edifices in the Union. St. Mary's Academy, for young ladies, at Little Rock, is also a Catholic institution.

Periodical Press.—In all the State there are but 14 periodicals—13 are issued weekly, and one at a period of two weeks. The aggregate circulation of the weekly papers is only 7,250 copies, or 877,000 copies annually. Of the whole number of papers, three are Whig in politics, and five Democratic, the remaining six being devoted to literature, religion, and various other subjects. Many single counties in New York and Ohio contribute more to literature than the whole of this State.

"Arkansas, with all that nature has done for her, is far behind her neighbors in improvements, population, and general prosperity. It is a source of humiliation to make these acknowledgments; but the truth should be told, though the heavens fall." Such was the language of the Committee on Arkansas Railroads, at the New Orleans Convention, in 1851, and such must be the response of every intelligent resident of the State. With her increase of population, and reviving prosperity, however, it is to be hoped that so magnificent a State, one so richly endowed and so blessed with a propitious climate and soil, will take heed and redeem itself from the just opprobrium of the enlightened among themselves, and of the world that is observant of their progress.

LITTLE ROCK is the State capital.

BALTIMORE county, Md. Situate N. E., and contains 631 sq. m. Drained by Patapsco, Gwynn's, Jones, and Great Gunpowder Falls rivers. Surface uneven and varied. Soils thin and rocky, but fertile. Timber abundant, as also iron, copper, and other minerals, with building stone of various kinds. Farms 1,655; manuf. 2,569; dwell. 30,065, and pop.—wh. 175,358, fr. col. 28,570, sl. 6,718—total 210,646. Capital: Baltimore. Public Works: Baltimore and Ohio R. R.; Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore R. R.; Baltimore and Susquehanna R. R., with Westminster Branch; and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. A R. R. also runs from Westchester, Pa., direct to Baltimore (in progress).

BALTIMORE CITY, sea-port, p. city, and cap. Baltimore co., Md.: on the N. side Patapsco r., 14 m. from its entrance into Chesapeake Bay, and 204 m. from the Atlantic Ocean, by ship channel, and 28 m. N. Annapolis; lat. 39° 17' 23", and long. 0° 24' E. Washington.

The city is pleasantly situated on a slightly undulating ground, and some of the elevations in the vicinity command fine views. As laid out, it includes four miles square, and is built around the bay. The streets are regular and spacious, the buildings mostly of brick, and some of them exhibiting beautiful architectural combinations. Jones' Falls, a small stream from the N., divides the city into two parts, and over it are erected several handsome stone and wooden bridges.

The harbor of Baltimore is capacious and safe, and consists of an inner basin and an outer harbor—the latter at Fell's Point, and accessible to the largest ships. The entrance is commanded by Fort M'Henry.

The principal public buildings are the City Hall, the County Court House, the State Penitentiary, County Prison and House of Refuge, the Roman Catholic Cathedral, the finest in the Union, and numerous buildings devoted to collegiate, academic, and other literary and educational purposes. The monuments of Baltimore, and its numerous fountains, are distinguishing features in the adornments of the city.

The population, in 1850, amounted to 169,054 souls, of which 140,666 were whites, 25,442 fr. col., and 2,946 sl. The total value of real and personal estate was $80,237,960, and the taxes raised, $617,994, of which $381,509 was city tax. Baltimore has 4 colleges, 67 academies and private schools, and 71 primary and public schools. The University, St. Mary's College, and Washington Medical College, are the principal collegiate institutions. There are 99 churches of all denominations, of which 6 are Baptist, 10 Episcopal, 3 German Reformed, 8 Lutheran, 42 Methodist, 4 Presbyterian, 8 Roman Catholic, and 8 others not specified. The public press consists of 6 daily, 4 tri-weekly, 10 weekly, 1 semi-monthly, and 2 monthly periodicals and newspapers; and of these 6 are religious, 1 agricultural, 1 musical, and 1 colonization; the remainder are devoted to politics and general news.

The industrial employments of the citizens are various and extensive. There are 2,243 establishments; the manufacturing capital invested, $6,541,922; males employed, 15,442; females employed, 5,044; raw material consumed, $9,444,241; monthly cost of labor, $459,441; annual products, $20,416,511; of these establishments, 71 are blacksmith, 356 boot and shoe, 111 cabinet ware, 120 cigar, 233 clothing, 26 coach and carriage, 10 brass founding, 13 iron founding, 10 gunsmith, 12 machine, 10 piano-forte, 17 printing and publishing, 24 sail-making, 21 ship-building, 13 ship-joiner, 16 ship-smith, 31 silver-smith, etc., 19 stove, 15 weavers, 21 wheelwright, and 10 whitesmith—the remainder various, and of common interest.

As a commercial city Baltimore ranks next to New Orleans among the southern ports. It has an immense inland trade, which will be greatly increased when the lines of communication are completed to a junction with those of Ohio and other western States. In 1850, the principal receipts from the interior for consumption and export, were: Cumberland coal, 146,645 tons, and anthracite, 160,000 tons; wheat, 2,600,000 bushels (about 1,750,000 bushels taken by millers, and 850,000 bushels shipped); Indian corn, 3,000,000 bushels; oats, 450,000 bushels, and considerable lots of rye, barley, peas, and beans; beef, pork, and bacon; tobacco, 41,533 hhd.s.; wool, 590,000 lbs., etc., etc.; the inspections of flour amounted to 896,592 barrels; of corn meal, to 46,000 barrels; and of rye flour, to 5,441 barrels; of leather, to 413,974 sides. Flour and tobacco, however, are the two great staples of Baltimore, and well has it been designated as "the greatest market for tobacco in the United States, and the principal flour market in the world." Its coastwise trade is also very extensive, and the shipping of Baltimore is found in every port from Passamaquoddy Bay to the Rio Grande; the lumber of Maine, and the cotton and sugar of the Gulf States are brought here in vast quantities, as are also the various manufactures and merchandises of the intermediate Atlantic ports; in 1850, 25,000 bales cotton were landed from southern ports, and 63,000,000 feet of lumber from Bangor and other ports of Maine. The shipping owned in the collection district, of which Baltimore is the port, amounted on the 1st of June, 1850, to 140,019 tons, of which was registered 90,670 tons; enrolled and licensed 57,612 tons, and licensed under 20 tons 737 tons; and of the enrolled and licensed tonnage, 13,115 tons, navigated by steam-power. In 1849-50, 66 vessels, of an aggregate burden of 11,683 tons, were built in the port district. The Baltimore clippers are pronounced to be the perfection of naval architecture; and they are no less fitted for trade than for privateering, in which capacity they made a great figure in the last war with England.

Boston, New York, and New Orleans are the only seaboard ports of the Union, the foreign commerce of which exceeds that of Baltimore. In 1849-50, the entrances amounted to 433 vessels and 99,583 tons, and the clearances to 521 vessels and 126,819 tons; and the value of merchandise imported was $6,124,201, and of that exported, $6,967,353. The great bulk of the foreign commerce of Baltimore is carried on with the States of South America and the West India colonies, and the continent of Europe. With the British ports in Europe the connection is very limited.

There are 10 banks in Baltimore, with an aggregate capital of $7,101,051. The circulation in 1850 amounted to $2,073,573, discounts to $10,925,106, and deposits to $3,648,519, and the amount of specie on hand to $2,113,758. There are also a number of insurance companies and savings' institutions.

The city is bountifully supplied with pure and wholesome water from public springs and fountains; these are inclosed by circular railings, and covered by small, open temples, consisting of columns supporting a dome, which are highly ornamental. The city, however, derives its great supply from an elevated part of Jones' Falls, from which the water is conducted through an aqueduct to a reservoir on Calvert-street, whence it is distributed in pipes.

The lines of travel diverging from Baltimore, are: the Baltimore and Philadelphia R. R., 97 m. long; the Baltimore and Susquehanna R. R., extending to Harrisburg, Pa.; and the Baltimore and Ohio R. R., with a branch R. R. to Washington; and lines of steamships or sail-vessels ply to Philadelphia, Norfolk, and other Atlantic ports. These great routes of communication unite the city with every part of the Union, and insure a rapid and certain transit to its ever-increasing trade.

Baltimore was first laid out as a town in 1729, and in 1765 it contained only 50 houses. It was chartered as a city in 1797. Since this period its increase has been constant, and its prosperity material.

Lat. 44° 47' 50" N., and long. 68° 47' W. from Greenwich. Pop. 14,432. Kenduskeag r. divides the city into two parts, which are connected by bridges; a mile above the city it has a fall which affords mill-power. The harbor is spacious, and at tide is deep enough for the largest vessels. The principal staple of trade is timber. The Bangor Theological Seminary, and other good schools, are located here; and the periodical press consists of two daily papers, the "Mercury" and the "Whig and Courier," and four weekly papers, two of which are editions of the daily papers, and the others, the "Democrat" and the "Jeffersonian." Churches of all denominations are numerous. There is a R. R. extending hence to Old Town, and another, the Kennebec and Penobscot R. R., will afford, when finished, a direct R. R. communication southward. Steamboats ply regularly to and from the river villages, and also to and from Boston and Portland. Bangor was incorporated as a town in 1791, and was chartered as a city in 1834. Just above the city, a bridge, 1,320 feet long, spans the Penobscot, connecting Bangor with Orrington.

BOSTON, p. city, sea-port, and cap. Suffolk co., and capital of the State of Massachusetts: at the head of Massachusetts Bay, near the confluence of Charles and Mystic rivers. These streams are navigable only for a few miles, but uniting with Neponset and Weymouth rivers, form one of the noblest harbors of the world—land-locked, accessible to ships of the line, easily defended, and rarely obstructed by ice. It extends 14 m. from Point Alderton to Medford; and from Chelsea to Hingham is at least 8 m. wide, covering 75 sq. m., and would hold all the shipping of the Union. The entrance for large vessels is very narrow, barely sufficient for two to sail abreast. It is defended by three fortresses, two of which, on George's and Castle islands, are on the largest scale, and constructed with all the improvements of modern science. The third, or Citadel, on Governor's island, is not yet completed. These will effectually command the entrance, and, when finished, make it impregnable. The harbor is well adapted to commerce. The peninsula and island of Boston is literally fringed with wharves and docks, while around the harbor and its affluents are clustered many cities and villages, into which Boston overflows, all of which have piers and landing-places, viz.: Hingham, Hull, Quincy, Milton, Dorchester, Roxbury, Brookline, Brighton, Newton, Watertown, Cambridge, Charlestown, Chelsea, Malden, Medford, and Somerville. Lat. 42° 21' 23" N., and long. 71° 04' 09" W.—432 m. N. E. Washington City.

The early settlers chose for their residence, in 1630, a peninsula, connected with the main by a narrow isthmus, occasionally overflowed, and divided at high tide into two islands. The entire tract contained 600 acres. It was called Shawmut or Trimountain, and derived its name from its springs and three lofty hills. The spot was undoubtedly selected for pure water, facilities for commerce, and security from wolves and Indians. Boston soon became an important sea-port, and at an early period became distinguished for her enterprise and commerce, and was peculiarly noted for her ship-building and fisheries. In 1740 the pop. was 17,000. For more than half a century from this period the growth of the city was checked by wars and the restrictive policy of England, and hence in 1790 the city contained only 15,038 inhabitants. Before the Revolution she was the first commercial city on the coast; her reputation was identified with the country, and the colonists were generally known as Bostonians among the French and Canadians. But during that eventful struggle her citizens were compelled to abandon their firesides, and their commerce was literally ruined. Her sacrifice for the common cause was severe, and her recovery slow. New York and Philadelphia consequently outstripped her. But since 1790 the city has advanced rapidly. She embarked largely in the trade to India and China; in voyages to the North-west Coast, and in the fisheries, carrying trade, etc.; and opened an extensive business with Russia, the Mediterranean, South America, Liverpool, and the British Colonies. When commerce was paralyzed by the embargo and war of 1812, she commenced manufactures, which have since expanded into every variety of form. More recently her citizens have taken a deep interest in railroads, and opened to the city an interior to which nature gave her no access.

A peninsula, less than one mile square, was soon found insufficient for Boston, and the State annexed to her Dorchester Point, a peninsula of 600 acres. To this, now called South Boston, she is united by four bridges. At a later period ferries were established to Noddles Island (660 acres), and this now forms a ward of the city. Some hundred acres have also been reclaimed from the sea; but these narrow limits, about 3 sq. m. in extent, proved inadequate, and have long been exceeded, and the population outside the chartered limits of Boston already equals the population within. As a metropolitan district, Boston, indeed, may be said to extend a circuit of nine miles round the Exchange, within which limits the population in 1860 was 269,874.

The population of Boston proper, at successive decennial periods, has been as follows: in 1790, it was 18,088; in 1800, 24,987; in 1810, 33,250; in 1820, 43,298; in 1830, 61,391; in 1840, 93,388; and in 1850, 188,788.

As Boston grew in population and manufactures, the natural spring, which gave it the Indian name of Shawmut, gradually failed; and the water deteriorated, and the citizens were obliged to deepen the ancient wells from year to year. It was at length necessary to resort to a foreign supply. In 1795 wooden pipes were laid by a company from Jamaica Pond, and as the demand increased, 10 in. iron pipes were substituted. This source having proved insufficient, a new aqueduct was constructed from Cochituate Lake, 20 m. from the Exchange, and was opened in 1849. The mean elevation of the lake is 120 feet above the marsh level. The water is carried 14½ m. by a brick conduit of an elliptical form, 6 feet 4 in. by 5 feet, with a regular descent of 3 1-6 inches per mile, to a large reservoir in Brookline. Here a pond of 22 acres, and holding 100,000,000 gallons, has been formed by closing the outlet of a valley. The reservoir is 123 feet above the sea. The water is carried over Charles r. by two parallel pipes 30 in. diameter. From Brookline, large iron pipes, carry the water to a granite reservoir on the summit of Beacon Hill, holding 2,500,000 gallons, and to another on Dorchester Heights, holding 6,000,000 gallons. These are 120 feet above the sea, and the water is hence conducted through 70 m. of pipe through the streets, and has generally been introduced into dwellings and stores. The head is sufficient to throw a 3 in. jet 92 feet high, from the fountain on the Common. The aqueduct is competent to supply 14,000,000 gallons daily. East Boston is also supplied from this source, pipes being conducted over Charles and Mystic rivers.

The city proper now is, and the suburbs soon will be, lighted with gas.

The principal public buildings in Boston and its vicinity, are Quincy Market, a granite structure, 500 by 38 feet; the State House, a large and commodious building; Faneuil Hall, an ancient brick edifice; the Massachusetts General Hospital, a large stone structure, at West Boston; the old State House; the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary; the Institute for the Blind at South Boston; the Orphan Asylum; the Farm School; the City Hall, and Suffolk Court House, large granite buildings; the Registry of Deeds'

Offices; the Merchants' Exchange, of granite, also; the Athenæum, of free-stone; the Custom House; a Club House, of free-stone; 23 large School-houses, costing $708,000; 41 Primary School-houses; 3 Theatres; a Museum; and 2 large buildings of granite, used for concerts and lectures. Boston has also erected an extensive Jail, of Quincy granite, and a spacious Alms House, at Deer Island. At Rainsford's Island she has also the Quarantine Hospital, and the buildings hitherto used for jails and alms houses at West and South Boston. The citizens of Boston have rarely been wanting in the cause of benevolence, and many of their institutions are richly endowed. Previous to 1845, a single institution, the General Hospital and M'Lean Asylum, had received $640,942; and the entire amount of donations to such public objects was ascertained to have been, prior to 1846, $1,992,659.

Very few of the ancient burial grounds are now used for interments; several have been planted, and contribute much to the ornament of the city. In 1831, Mount Auburn, in Cambridge, a spot remarkable for its natural beauties, was selected as a rural cemetery. It contains 118 acres, and during the last 18 years, 1,756 lots have been sold, realizing $175,000. Roads and paths have been opened, a granite gateway and chapel built, and iron railing set round it; many tasteful monuments of marble have been erected, and it has become a place of frequent resort for the living as for the dead. At Forest Hill, Roxbury, is another beautiful cemetery, and others at Brighton and Wood Lawn. The cemetery of Mount Auburn is the first instance in America of a large tract having been chosen for its natural beauties, and improved by landscape gardening, to prepare it for the reception of the dead.

Boston is the commercial emporium of New England, and next to New York among the commercial cities of the Union. In 1850, the shipping owned in the district amounted to 320,687 tons. The foreign arrivals amounted to 2,577 vessels, of an aggregate burden of 478,859 tons; and the foreign clearances, 2,839 vessels, of 487,760 tons. The shipping built in the year 1849-50, was 23,450 tons. The value of imports in 1849 was $24,117,175; and of exports, $8,549,974. Boston enjoys, also, a large local and coast-wise trade. Within the borders of Massachusetts are two cities with over 30,000 inhabitants, ten with 10,000 to 20,000, ten towns with 6,000 to 10,000, twenty with 4,000 to 6,000. Between these and Boston an active commerce exists; and by her iron arms she reaches through this populous interior to the north and west, to Canada and the Mississippi. The coast-wise importations in 1849 consisted in part of 269,813 bales of cotton, 262,632 tons anthracite, 987,988 barrels of flour, 3,002,593 bushels of corn, 621,513 bushels of oats, rye, and shorts, 88,199 barrels turpentine, 663,580 sides of leather, 156,556 barrels of pork, 200,560 pigs of lead, etc. Large importations are also made, particularly from New Orleans, of beef, hemp, sugar, molasses, tobacco, and other articles. Vessels of all sizes, from 50 to 1,000 tons, are engaged in the coasting trade. The arrivals in 1849 were 6,100 vessels, which number does not include sloops and schooners, laden with wood, stone, and sundries, some thousands annually, that do not report at the custom house. By railroad the tonnage transported amounted to 1,167,129 tons.

The trade of Boston with the West and South is immense; her manufactures and imports are sent by railway and packets to the farthest limits of the country. Lines of packets run to all the seaboard cities, freighted with the cottons, boots, shoes, and other domestic goods, the produce of the State's industry. With California, also, Boston has had large dealings: at least one fifth of the shipping that sails from Atlantic ports for "El Dorado," hails from Boston.

In 1850, there were 29 banks in the city, and the banking capital amounted to $21,460,000. The amount deposited in Savings' Banks, was $3,977,799 owned by 29,799 depositors. The stock capital of Boston insurance companies, was $5,483,000. There were also in the city numerous mutual, and several foreign insurance companies.

The assessed value of property in Boston is $179,525,000, and the city debt to about $7,000,000, chiefly owing on account of the water-works. This debt is small compared with the wealth and resources of the city. The property of the city consists of the "Common," a beautiful park of 43 acres, encircled by an iron fence; the Public Garden, containing 14 acres, and several public squares and areas, embellished by fountains. These are all devoted to the health and recreation of the citizens. She owns also valuable property that may be sold; the whole is valued at $5,071,000, and at the present time yields a revenue of $300,000 annually. The expenses of the city are chiefly for her schools, street improvements, watch, and the support of correctional and humane institutions.

Some of the artificial structures which connect Boston with the main deserve notice. The Western Avenue, 7,000 feet long, leads from the old peninsula to Brookline, Roxbury, and Brighton; it is a solid structure of granite, filled in with earth, and cost $700,000. Besides forming a wide carriage road, it creates a large water-power, and has redeemed many acres from the harbor. West Boston Bridge and Causeway, 6,190 feet long, connects Boston with Cambridge; Canal Bridge is 2,796 feet long; Warren Bridge, 1,390 feet; Long Wharf, 1,800 feet long and 200 feet wide; Central Wharf, 1,379 feet long and 150 feet wide; India Wharf, 950 feet long. Along these wharves are continuous blocks of warehouses, 4 or 5 stories high, and from 50 to 80 feet deep. Granite, Connecticut, and Lewis's wharves are of like size, and have ranges of large stone warehouses.

The schools of Boston are frequently referred to as models of perfection. Their number and excellence, with her liberal patronage of education, have given the city the title of the Modern Athens, and their merit and importance cannot be overated. In 1850, her primary schools had 11,876 scholars, her grammar schools 9,154, and other schools 471 scholars. Boston has also a Latin and High School, in which the higher branches are taught with signal ability. All these schools are open free of charge to all. Without the chartered limits of the city are Harvard University, with its Law and Theological Schools, a Baptist College, and many excellent schools and academies.

There are several public libraries in the city. The Athenæum Library, the Boston and Mercantile libraries, the Law Library, the State Library, and several libraries of Harvard University. These together contain upward of 150,000 volumes.

There are 80 periodicals and newspapers published in Boston, several of which are worked by steam presses, and have large circulations. These refer to almost every department of literature, religion, science, agriculture, banks, railroads, belles-lettres, statistics, history, medicine, law, education, etc.

The religious and charitable institutions of the city are also numerous. It has nearly 200 churches and places of worship. There is also a General Hospital, two Insane Hospitals, an Asylum for the Blind, an Eye and Ear Infirmary, a Lying-in-Hospital, an Asylum for Orphan Girls, and a Farm School for Boys. Most of these are liberally endowed.

The United States have expended large sums in and around Boston on their fortresses and arsenal, extensive navy yard, dry dock, and rope walks, and stores of cannon, arms, and materiel, a Customs House, and hospitals for sick and infirm seamen. All these are situated in Boston Harbor, and are valued at $8,000,000. The navy yard is second only to that of Norfolk.

Should Boston and her suburbs increase for 25 years at its present rate, its population will exceed 1,500,000. If we would seek for a solution of the growth of Boston in commerce, wealth, and population, we may have it not only in its central position and admirable harbor, but in the enterprise, intelligence, and frugality of her people. Her enterprise descends lineally from those bold ancestors who planted an empire in the wilderness. Their spirit and their love of letters are inherited. These have guided its enterprise. But it is one thing to acquire and another to retain. The frugality of the people is the great secret of accumulation, and hence Boston has risen to its present glorious position, which is every day becoming more and more enviable and unapproachable.

Albany. Pop. in 1810, 4,402; in 1820, 7,175; in 1830, 15,396; in 1840, 36,233; and in 1850, 96,588. It is now the eighth, in regard to population, in the Union, and the second in the State. Dwell. in 1850, 10,197. Value of real estate $32,010,711, and of personal property $3,950,559.

Brooklyn was originally built on very uneven ground, and still—although the grades have been greatly leveled—retains many of the natural beauties for which it was so pre-eminent. The Heights of Brooklyn, seen from the New York side of the East River, are unrivalled as city scenery, and there are also, farther back, eminences which afford fine localities for residences. The streets are regularly laid out, and are from 60 to 100 feet wide; and on the whole, no other city of the Union has so many substantial and handsome public buildings. The City Hall is a fine marble structure, at the head of Fulton-street, and the banking houses, school-houses, and churches are elegant and commodious. It is the city of churches. The city is divided into eleven wards, and governed by a mayor and common council, and in its police arrangements is much superior to the neighboring city of New York. It is lighted throughout with gas, which has also been generally introduced into the dwellings of the rich; and there is a project on foot for introducing into the city a supply of water from the S. side of Long Island. At present, water is supplied from the public pumps or cisterns; and in case of an extensive fire, there is not a sufficiency. The charter officers of the city are the mayor, comptroller, street commissioner, commissioner of repairs and supplies, collector of taxes, and chief of police; and for each ward an alderman and assistant alderman, a supervisor, an assessor, a commissioner of excise, and constable. These are elected by the citizens, and form respectively boards intrusted with the city government. The city clerk, the attorney and counselor, the health officer, the city treasurer, the sealer of weights and measures, the clerk of police and justices courts, the city surveyors, etc., are appointed by the common council. For police purposes, the city is divided into four districts, each, except the first district (which has 48), having 32 policemen, under a captain and two assistant captains.

The commerce of Brooklyn is relatively large; but as the city is within the collection district of New York, no separate returns are made in the published accounts. The river front of the city is literally fringed with wharves, and backed by extensive warehouses, while the Atlantic Dock and its immense stores enhance the importance of its shipping facilities. The dock contains 4½ acres, and the pier front, facing on Buttermilk Channel, has a length of 3,000 feet. Ships of the largest size enter it, and unload into the adjoining stores by means of patent cranes, worked by steam-power.
Other dock facilities are about to be built beyond Red Hook. There are four banks in the city, two savings' institutions, and four fire insurance companies, with numerous other associations for commercial and economical purposes.
Its churches number 63, of which 11 are Episcopal, 7 Roman Catholic, 6 Baptist, 6 German Reformed, 5 Congregational, 7 Presbyterian, 11 Methodist Episcopal, and each one, African Methodist Episcopal, Universalist, Unitarian, Friends, Sailors' Bethel, Congregational Methodist, American Primitive Methodist, Protestant Methodist, Second Advent, and Reformed Presbyterian. The city contains thirteen school districts, which are under the superintendence of the Board of Education. It also constitutes one colored school district. The public schools are entirely free to children residing within the respective districts in which the schools are located. Each district contains a valuable district library, the use of the books being free to all the inhabitants of the district, both male and female.
In the larger districts the libraries number between 3,000 and 4,000 volumes each. Academies and high schools for youth of both sexes are also very numerous, and are generally well and ably conducted. The Brooklyn Institute, Washington-street, is one of its highest institutions, and has connected with it a Youths' Free Library, and free lectures and concerts are given during the winter. Among the benevolent institutions of the city, the most conspicuous are the City Hospital, Raymond-street, and the Dispensary in Pineapple-street.

In the east part of Brooklyn is the United States' Navy Yard, situate on the Wallabout. It covers some 40 acres, and contiguous thereto are mooring grounds, etc. The yard is inclosed on the land side by a high brick wall, and within are large ship-houses, timber sheds, store-houses, workshops, etc.; and an immense Dry Dock, the greatest work of the kind within the United States, has been lately completed. The Naval Hospital, half a mile east of the yard, occupies a commanding eminence, and is surrounded by a fine park and grounds, about 83 acres in extent.

The Greenwood Cemetery, on Gowanus Heights, in the
S. part of the city, is one of the most picturesque and beautiful burial-plots any where to be found. It occupies nearly 300 acres of land, and is laid out in avenues, embellished by shade trees and shrubbery. The surface is of every variety, interspersed with ponds and lakelets, and from its higher parts commands an extensive view of the harbor, and the scenery of the lower Hudson. Its monuments, erected in memory of the dead, some at the expense of the public or societies, and others in commemoration of private friendships or relations, are of every description, but chiefly of white marble, and finely sculptured. Altogether, it is the most extensive and most beautiful cemetery within the borders of the Union, and is an establishment of which the city may well be proud.

For so large a city, Brooklyn is but poorly represented by its press, a fact accounted for by its proximity to New York City, the literary as well as the commercial emporium of America. Four papers are published daily, the "B. Star," and the "B. Advertiser" (whig), the "Daily Freeman" (indep't.), and the "B. Eagle" (dem.); and the papers published weekly are the "Long Island Star" (whig), and the "Independent" (temperance), and there is also a weekly edition of the "Eagle." The New York papers are delivered here to citizens at the same time as in New York; and as these generally contain more extended accounts of, and comments on current affairs, and are conducted with more skill and talent, they have a much larger circulation than the Brooklyn papers. The nearness of New York, indeed, affects every grade and profession in the same manner: few of the richer classes purchase their goods or provisions in Brooklyn; and hence no department of life has the same vitality as it would have if the wealthy could be induced to purchase of their neighbor, instead of giving the profit of their custom to the traders of the neighboring city. In many respects, however, Brooklyn is only a suburb of the metropolis—a residence for business men, and not a mart of commerce.

Brooklyn is connected with New York by five ferries: Hamilton Avenue Ferry and South Ferry (Atlantic-street), run to Whitehall, in New York; Fulton Ferry, from foot of Fulton-street, Brooklyn, to Fulton-street, New York; Catharine Ferry, from foot of Maine-street, Brooklyn, to Catharine-street, New York; and Jackson Ferry, from foot of Jackson-street, Brooklyn, to foot of Gouverneur-street, New York. The steamboats on these ferries are all of the first class, and commodious for carriages and wagons as well as passengers. The fare on the three first is one cent for each passenger.

Brooklyn was the scene of stirring events at an early stage of the Revolutionary War. In August, 1776, this part of Long Island became the seat of strife, and the fortifications then thrown up by the patriots may still be seen, but are now undergoing the process of demolition to extend city improvements. The principal of these is Fort Green, which will hence be known as Washington Park, and which will be devoted to recreation and health. Near the Navy Yard is the tomb in which are deposited the remains of 11,000 Americans who perished in the prison ships moored in the bay during the Revolution. At the conclusion of peace, in 1783, Brooklyn contained only 56 houses; nor was it until the period between 1820 and 1830 that it began to receive the overflowing population of New York. Since then it has rapidly increased, and in all probability the census of 1860 will find it a city of 200,000 souls. The only drawback, indeed, to its unlimited settlement, seems to be the want of a sufficient supply of water for so large a population as circumstances would indicate to be its destiny to contain.

BUFFALO, post city, port of entry, and cap. Erie co., N. Y.: at the outlet of Lake Erie, and the head of Niagara r., 254 m. W. Albany. The city lies on Buffalo cr., which falls into the lake, and constitutes its harbor. The distance to Albany by railroad is 323 m., and by canal 364 m. Lat. 42° 53' N., and long. 78° 55' W. Pop. in 1840, 15,213, and in 1850, 42,260.

Buffalo is the great entrepôt between the north-west and the states of the Atlantic sea-board—the gate through which the bulk of commercial material must pass for a market. Its position is unrivaled on the lakes, and from the advantages possessed by its port it has become the rendezvous for a vast tonnage employed on these western waters. The harbor is spacious and safe, the creek having a depth of 13 or 14 feet for a mile up, and being from 12 to 16 rods wide. Its only obstruction is the sand and gravel at its mouth, driven in by gales of wind, but this defect has been obviated by the extension of a pier 1,500 feet long from the S. side of the entrance. This pier, which has a light-house at its end, operates as a breakwater, and, by confining the creek, has cleared its channel, so that vessels drawing 8 feet pass in without difficulty. The increasing commerce of the port, however, demands greater accommodations, and several valuable improvements are projected in the harbor.

The land on which the city is built rises by a very gentle ascent two miles from the water, and from its higher parts affords fine views of the neighboring scenery, the lake, the Niagara River, and Canada shore being within the view. The city is laid out in broad and regular streets, which contain numerous elegant stores, large warehouses, depôts of railroads, etc., and most of the dwellings are substantial and neat. There are three public squares, which add much to the salubrity and beauty of the city. The public buildings are a court-house, jail, and other county offices, two markets, the city offices, churches, banks, etc. The Roman

The city is divided into five wards, and is governed by a mayor and common council. The charter officers are a comptroller, treasurer, surveyor, etc., and in each ward are health inspectors, and other officers. The courts are the County Court, the Recorder's Court, and the Police and Justices' Courts. In the Fire Department there are nine engine companies, two hook and ladder, and a hose company. Water is supplied to the citizens through pipes, and the streets are lighted with gas. Among the benevolent institutions of the city, the most conspicuous are the Orphan Asylum, the City Hospital, the Hospital of the Sisters of Charity, the Female Orphan Asylum, and the Association for the Relief of the Poor. The city is well supplied with common schools, open to all children, and has many highly efficient academies and private schools.

The University of Buffalo was chartered in 1846, and has a medical department. The Young Men's Association, established in 1835, is one of the best literary societies in the State, and has a fine library of 6,000 or 7,000 volumes, and a select cabinet of mineral and zoological specimens. During the winter, a series of lectures on literary and scientific subjects are delivered by eminent professors. The German Young Men's Association is a similar institution, and has in its library nearly 2,000 volumes, chiefly valuable works in the German language. The rooms of both these are amply supplied with periodicals and newspapers.

The press of Buffalo consists of the "B. Commercial Advertiser," the oldest daily paper in the city: a tri-weekly edition is also issued; the "Patriot and Journal," weekly; the "Western Literary Messenger," monthly; the "B. Medical Journal and Monthly Review;" the B. Daily Courier," of which tri-weekly and weekly editions are also published; the "Morning Express," daily, tri-weekly, and weekly; the "B. Republic," daily and weekly; the "Daily Queen City;" the "Evangelical Christian," semi-monthly; the "B. Christian Advocate;" the "Wool-Grower and Magazine of Agriculture and Horticulture," monthly; the "B. Pathfinder," weekly; and the following, which are German publications: "Der Weltbürger," semi-weekly and weekly; the "B. Telegraph," weekly; and the "B. Democrat," daily and weekly.

There are in the city about 40 churches: 3 are Episcopal, 4 Presbyterian, 1 Associate Reformed Presbyterian (Scottish), 1 Reformed Presbyterian, 1 colored Presbyterian, 5 Methodist Episcopal, 4 Baptist, 1 Unitarian, 1 Universalist, 7 Roman Catholic, 1 Lutheran, and 7 or 8 German churches of various denominations.

The commerce carried on between Buffalo and Canada, in 1850, amounted to $527,270, of which $229,196 was the value of exports, and $307,074 of imports; and the shipping employed in the transit of the merchandise represented by these values, was—American vessels cleared, 282 (29,696 tons), and entered, 246 (26,352 tons); and British vessels cleared, 466 (73,897 tons), and entered, 473 (75,640 tons). Total clearances, 748 vessels (103,533 tons), and total entrances, 719 vessels (101,992 tons). The value of imports from domestic lake ports, was $22,525,781, and of exports, $44,501,737. The arrivals, coastwise, numbered 3,558 vessels (1,255,430 tons), and the clearances, 3,599 vessels (1,263,907 tons). The value of merchandise delivered by the Erie Canal, was $41,859,270, besides which the railroad from Albany delivered goods to the value of $6,041,456. Forming the material of this commerce, we find the sugars of Louisiana, the cottons of Tennessee and Mississippi, the hemp of Kentucky, the furs of Missouri and the distant West, the copper of Lake Superior, the lead of Wisconsin, the agricultural and forest products of all the States bordering on the lakes, the manufactures of New England and New York, and a small amount in bond and otherwise of Canadian products. The imports into Buffalo, in 1850, from the Western States, consisted in part of 1,103,089 barrels of flour, 3,651,846 bushels of wheat, 2,593,378 bushels of Indian corn, 52,124,275 feet boards and scantling, 19,988,962 staves, 4,568,000 shingles, 161,110 boxes and 3,158 casks of cheese, 40,135 kegs and 2,203 barrels of butter, 83,867 bales of wool, 10,180 sheep, 46,448 live and 7,420 slaughtered hogs, etc. The exports consisted of the property landed at Buffalo from the Erie Canal, the Albany and Buffalo Railroad, and the manufactures and productions of the city itself; of these, castings, agricultural implements, furniture, dry goods, groceries, etc., formed the great bulk, but included was almost every thing that is known to commerce. (For a full account of the commerce of Buffalo, consult Andrews' Report of the Trade and Commerce of the British North American Colonies with the United States, etc., presented to the U. S. Senate [Dec. 23] in 1851.)

The shipping owned in the collection district of Buffalo, on the 30th June, 1850, amounted to 39,679 tons, all of the class "permanent enrolled, and licensed," of which 23,055 tons were propelled by steam, and the whole engaged in the coasting trade. The number of vessels built in the year ending at the same date, was 7 [1,730 tons]—1 brig, 2 schooners, and 4 steamers.

Buffalo has 10 banks, and one savings' institution; also, including agencies, 44 fire, marine and life insurance companies.

The railroads uniting Buffalo with Canada, the Great West, and the States eastward, are magnificent works. Those pointing east, are the great line terminating at Albany, and there connecting with the New England and Southern New York roads, and the navigation of the Hudson; and the several lines uniting with the New York and Erie R. R., known as the Buffalo and New York City R. R., and the Buffalo, Corning, and New York R. R. The West is reached by the Buffalo and State Line R. R., which connects with the system of roads in Ohio and the other lake States, and extends to the Mississippi River; and Canada will be reached by the Buffalo and Brantford R. R., the Great Western R. R., and others now being constructed. Railroads also run to Niagara, Lewistown, etc. There are also several plank roads centering in Buffalo, and reaching back to the principal villages in the county.

Buffalo was founded in 1801 by the Holland Land Company, but for a long period it made little progress, since in 1814, when burned by the British, it did not contain more than 200 houses; nor was it until the Erie Canal opened a navigable passage from the lake to the Hudson River, that it exhibited any uncommon rapidity of growth. Since that period, however, its prosperity has been unbounded, and its rise in the scale of importance as a commercial city has been such as its original founders could never have dreamed of. It now ranks as the fourth city of the State, and the twelfth of the United States, in respect of population, and in a commercial point of view is surpassed by only three or four of our sea-board ports.

BURLINGTON, t. p. city, port of entry, and cap. Chittenden co., Verm.: on Lake Champlain, 31 m. W. N. W. Montpelier. Lat 44° 17', and long. 72° 36' W. The village is situate on a bay, which, in the form of a regular curve, sets up a little on the E. side of the lake; on the S. the level is low, but on the N. rises to a high bluff, which, during the war of 1812, was strongly fortified. The streets cross each other E. and W. and N. and S., forming regular squares. Near the centre is a fine area on which the C. H. is located. Many of the houses are handsome structures, generally surrounded by shrubbery, with gardens in the rear; and there are commodious stores and warehouses. It is the largest and most convenient place in the State, and has a constant connection with the railroads leading through New England to Canada and the Great West. The lake is here 10 m. wide, and the harbor is protected from W. winds by a breakwater. The scenery on all sides is magnificent, combining lake and mountain views of great beauty and sublimity. The public buildings are the University of Vermont: it is an efficient and well-endowed institution, and has a medical department; the co. buildings, banks, churches, and several academic edifices. In the neighborhood are several flourishing manufacturing villages, chiefly on Winooski or Onion r. Three newspapers are published here, the "B. Sentinel" and "B. Free Press," daily and weekly, and the "Courier," weekly. The shipping owned in the district in 1850 amounted to 4,530 tons, of which 3,096 tons was navigated by steam. The clearances in the foreign trade in 1849-50, amounted to 342 vessels, measuring 52,556 tons, and the entrances to 404 vessels, measuring 99,435 tons. The collection district of Burlington comprises the whole lake shore of Vermont. Pop. of t. 7,505.

THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

CALIFORNIA occupies all that portion of California Alta* westward of the following line, to wit—beginning at the intersection of 42° north latitude, and 120° longitude west from Greenwich, or 42° 55' from Washington; thence south in a direct course to 39° north latitude; thence south-east to where the Rio Colorado intersects the parallel of 35° north latitude and thence down the mid channel of that river to the boundary between the United States and Mexico. Within these limits the surface measures 188,981 square miles, or 120,947,840 acres.

This grand division of California (the only part, indeed, to which the name properly applies) is traversed from N. to S. by two principal ranges of mountains, called respectively Sierra Nevada, which divides the region from the great basin, and the Coast Range, running almost parallel to and at a short distance from the Pacific coast. The main feature of this region is the long, low, broad valley of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers—the two valleys forming one—500 miles long and 50 miles broad. Lateral ranges, parallel with the Sierra, make the structure of the country, and break it into a surface of valleys and mountains—the valleys a few hundreds, and the mountains 2,000 to 4,000 feet above the sea. These form greater masses and become more elevated in the north, where some peaks, as the Shasté, enter the regions of perpetual snows. The great valley is discriminated only by the names of the rivers that traverse it. It is a single geographical formation, lying between the two ranges, and stretching across the head of the Bay of San Francisco, with which a delta of 25 miles connects it. The two rivers rise at opposite ends of this long valley, receive numerous affluents—many of them bold rivers, becoming themselves navigable rivers—flow toward each other, meet half way, and enter the bay together in the region of tide water: making a continuous water line from one end to the other. The resources of this valley, mineral and agricultural, are immense, and perhaps no part of the world affords greater facilities for easy development. Gold and quicksilver are the most valuable of its mineral products. The soil and climate, though varying much with locality, are generally well suited for agriculture. Westward of the rivers, the soil is chiefly dry and unproductive; but on the east side the country is well watered and luxuriantly fertile, being intersected by numerous fine streams, forming large and beautiful bottoms of rich land, wooded principally with white oaks. The foot hills of the Sierra, which limit the valley, make a woodland country, diversified with undulating grounds and pretty vales. Near the Tulare Lakes, and on the margins of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, the surface is composed of level plains, gradually changing into undulating, and rolling toward the mountains. The region west of the Coast Range to the Pacific—the only portion inhabited before the discovery of gold—has long been the seat of numerous missions; and around these, generally situated in the most lovely vales, agriculture has converted the country into a perfect garden. All the cereals of temperate regions are cultivated, and the olive and grape thrive luxuriantly. Wheat is the first product of the north. The moisture of the coast seems particularly suited to the cultivation of roots, and to vegetables used for culinary purposes, which, in fact, grow to an extraordinary size. Few localities, indeed, can produce in such perfection so great a variety of grains and fruits.

* California Alta in its full extent, as acquired of Mexico, lies between 32° and 42° N. lat., and 106° and 124° W. long., and is bounded N. by Oregon, E. by the crest of the Rocky Mountains, S. by the Rio Gila and California Bajas, and W. by the Pacific Ocean, on which it has a front of 900 m. The area included within those limits is 448,691 sq. m. This extensive territory is now divided into the State of California, Utah Territory, and (in part) the Territory of New Mexico.

The coasts of California are generally precipitous and rugged; and in relation to their extent present few good harbors. The bays of San Diego, Monterey, and San Francisco, are the finest, and their capacities extensive. San Francisco Bay is one of the most important in the world, not merely as a harbor, but also and mainly from the accessory advantages which belong to it—fertile and picturesque dependent country, general mildness of climate, connection with the great central valley, &c. When these advantages are taken into account, with its geographical position on the line of communication with Asia, its importance rises superior to all contingencies. Its latitudinal position is that of Lisbon; its climate that of Italy; bold shores and mountains give it grandeur; the extent and resources of its dependent country are the cynosure of the world. The bay is separated from the sea by low mountain ranges, and only a narrow gate, about a mile wide, affords an entrance. It is land-locked in every sense of the word, and protected on all sides from the weather. Passing through this narrow entrance, the bay opens to the right and left, extending in each direction about 35 miles, having a total length of 70 and a coast of 275 miles. It is divided by projecting points and straits into three separate compartments, of which the northern two are called San Pablo and Suisson bays. The surface is much broken by numerous islands—some mere rocks, and others grass-covered, rising to the height of 300 to 800 feet. Directly fronting the entrance, mountains, a few miles from the shore, rise about 2,000 feet above the water, crowned by forests of lofty cypress, which are visible from the sea, and make a conspicuous landmark for vessels entering the bay. Behind, the rugged peak of Mt. Diavolo, 3,770 feet high, overlooks the surrounding country of the bay and the San Joaquin.

The shore presents a varied character of rugged and broken hills, rolling and undulating land, and rich alluvial tracts, backed by fertile and wooded ranges, suitable for towns, villages, and farms, with which it is beginning to be over-peopled. Such is the bay and proximate country and shore of San Francisco. It is not a mere indentation of the coast, but a little sea to itself, connected with the ocean by a defensible gate. The head of the bay is about 40 miles distant from the sea, and there commences its connection with the noble valley of the San Joaquin and Sacramento.

The climate of California is so remarkable in its periodical changes, and for the long continuance of the wet and dry seasons, dividing as they do the year into about two equal parts, which have a most peculiar influence on the labor applied to agriculture and the products of the soil, and, in fact, connect themselves so inseparably with all the interests of the country, that it is deemed proper briefly to mention the causes which produce these changes, and which, it will be seen, must exercise an important and controlling influence on the commercial prosperity and resources of the country. It is a well-established theory, that the currents of the air under which the earth passes in its diurnal revolutions, follow the line of the sun's greatest attraction. These currents of air are drawn toward this line from great distances on each side of it, and, as the earth revolves from west to east, they blow from north-east and south-east, meeting, and, of course, causing a calm on the line. Thus, when the sun is directly, in common parlance, over the equator, in the month of March, these currents of air blow from some distance north of the Tropic of Cancer and south of the Tropic of Capricorn in an oblique direction toward this line of the sun's greatest attraction, and form what are known as the north-east and south-east trade-winds. As the earth in its path round the sun gradually brings the line of attraction north in summer, these currents of air are carried with it; so that about the middle of May the current from the north-east has extended as far the 35th or 39th degree of north latitude, and by the 20th of June, the period of the sun's greatest northern inclination, to the northern portions of California and the southern section of Oregon. These north-east winds, in their progress across the continent toward the Pacific Ocean, pass over the snow-capped ridges of the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada, and are, of course, deprived of all the moisture which can be extracted from them by the low temperature of those regions of eternal snow; and consequently no moisture can be precipitated from them, in the form of dew or rain, in a higher temperature than that to which they have been subjected. They therefore pass over the hills and plains of California, where the temperature is very high in summer, in a very dry state; and, so far from being charged with moisture, they absorb, like a sponge, all that the atmosphere and surface of the earth can yield, until both become apparently perfectly dry. This process commences when the line of the sun's greatest attraction comes north in summer, bringing with it these vast atmospheric movements, which on their approach produce the dry season in California, which, governed by these laws, continues until some time after the sun repasses the equator in September: when, about the middle of November, the climate being relieved from these north-east currents of air, the south-west winds set in from the ocean, charged with moisture, the rains commence, and continue to fall—not constantly, as some persons have represented, but with sufficient frequency to designate the period of their continuance—from about the middle of November until the middle of May, in the latitude of San Francisco—as the wet season. It follows, as a matter of course, that the dry season commences first and continues longest in the southern portions of the State, and that the climate of the northern part is influenced in a much less degree by the causes heretofore mentioned than any other section of the country. Consequently, we find, that as low down as latitude 39°, rains are sufficiently frequent in summer to render irrigation quite unnecessary to the perfect maturity of any crop which is suited to the soil and climate. There is an extensive ocean-current of cold water which comes from the northern regions of the Pacific, or, perhaps, from the Arctic, and flows along the coast of California. It comes charged with, and emits in its progress, cold air, which appears in the form of fog when it comes in contact with a higher temperature on the American coast—as the gulf stream of the Atlantic exhales vapor when it meets in any part of its progress a lower temperature. This current has not been surveyed, and, therefore, its source, temperature, velocity, width, and course, have not been accurately ascertained. It is believed by Lieutenant Maury, on what he considers sufficient evidence—and no higher authority can be cited—that this current comes from the coasts of China and Japan, flows northwardly to the peninsula of Kamtschatka, and, making a circuit to the eastward, strikes the American coast in about latitude 41° or 42° , it passes thence southwardly, and finally loses itself in the tropics. Below latitude 39° , and west of the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada, the forests of California are limited to some scattering groves of oak in the valleys and along the borders of the streams, and of red-wood on the ridges and on the gorges of the hills—sometimes extending into the plains. Some of the hills are covered with dwarf shrubs, which may be used as fuel. With these exceptions, the whole State presents a surface without trees or shrubbery. It is covered, however, with various species of grass, and, for many miles from the coast, with wild oats, which in the valleys grow most luxuriantly. These grasses and oats mature and ripen early in the dry season, and soon cease to protect the soil from the scorching rays of the sun. As the summer advances, the moisture in the atmosphere and the earth, to a considerable depth, soon becomes exhausted, and the radiation of heat from the extensive naked plains and hill-sides is very great. The cold, dry currents of air from the north-east, after passing the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada, descend to the Pacific, and absorb the moisture of the atmosphere to a great distance from the land. The cold air from the mountains and that which accompanies the great ocean-current from the north-west thus become united, and vast banks of fog are generated, which, when driven by the wind, have a penetrating or cutting effect on the human skin, much more uncomfortable than would be felt in the humid atmosphere of the Atlantic at a much lower temperature. As the sun rises from day to day, week after week, and month after month, in unclouded brightness during the dry season, and pours down its broken rays on the dry, unprotected surface of the country, the heat becomes so much greater inland than it is on the ocean, that an under-current of cold air, bringing the fog with it, rushes over the coast range of hills, and through their numerous passes, toward the interior. Every day, as the heat inland attains a sufficient temperature, the cold, dry wind from the ocean commences to blow. This is usually from 11 to 1 o'clock; and, as the day advances, the wind increases and continues to blow till late at night. When the vacuum is filled, or the equilibrium of the atmosphere restored, the wind ceases; a perfect calm prevails until about the same hour the following day, when the same process commences and progresses as before. And these phenomena are of daily occurrence, with few exceptions, throughout the dry season. These cold winds and fogs render the climate at San Francisco, and all along the coast of California, except the extreme southern portion of it, probably more uncomfortable to those not accustomed to it in summer than in winter. A few miles inland, where the heat of the sun modifies and softens the wind from the ocean, the climate is moderate and delightful. The heat, in the middle of the day, is not so great as to retard labor or render exercise in the open air uncomfortable. The nights are cool and pleasant. This description of climate prevails in all the valleys along the coast range, and extends throughout the country, north and south, as far eastward as the valley of the Sacramento and San Joaquin. In this vast plain, the sea-breeze loses its influence, and the degree of heat in the middle of the day, during the summer months, is much greater than is known on the Atlantic coast in the same latitudes. It is dry, however, and probably not more oppressive. On the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada, and especially in the deep ravines of the streams, the thermometer frequently ranges from 110° to 115° in the shade, during three or four hours of the day, say from 11 to 3 o'clock. In the evening, as the sun declines, the radiation of heat ceases. The cool, dry atmosphere from the mountains spreads over the whole country, and renders the nights cool and invigorating.

The valleys which are situated parallel to the coast range, and those which extend eastwardly in all directions among the hills toward the great plain of the Sacramento, are of surpassing fertility. They have a deep, black, alluvial soil, which has the appearance of having been deposited when they were covered with water. This idea is strengthened by the fact, that the rising grounds on the borders of these valleys, and many hills of moderate elevation, have a soil precisely like that of the adjoining plains. This soil is so porous that it remains perfectly unbroken by gullies, notwithstanding the great quantity of water which falls in it annually during the wet season. The land in the northern part of the State, on the Trinity and other rivers, and on the borders of Clear Lake, as far as it has been examined, is said to be remarkably fertile. The great valley of the Sacramento and San Joaquin has evidently been at some remote period the bed of a lake; and those rivers which drain it present the appearance of having cut their channels through the alluvial deposit after it had been formed. In fact, it is not possible that they could have been instrumental in forming the plain through which they pass. Their head-waters come from the extreme ends of the valley, north and south; and were it not for the supply of water received from the streams which flow into them from the Sierra Nevada, their beds would be almost, if not quite dry in the summer months. The soil is very rich, and, with a proper system of drainage and embankment, would undoubtedly be capable of producing any crop, except sugar-cane, now cultivated in the Atlantic States of the Union. There are many beautiful valleys and rich hill-sides among the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada, which, when the profits of labor in mining shall be reduced so as to cause its application to agriculture, will probably support a large population. There is said to be a rich belt of well-timbered and watered country extending the whole length of the gold region between it and the Sierra Nevada, some twenty miles in width. There is no information sufficiently accurate respecting the eastern slope of the great snowy range, to enable us to form any opinion of its general character or soil. Some of its valleys have been visited by miners, who represent them as equal to any portion of the country to the westward of it. The great valley of the Colorado, situated between the Sierra Madre and the Sierra Nevada, is but little known. It is inhabited by numerous tribes of savages, who manifest the most decided hostility toward the whites, and have hitherto prevented any explorations of their country, and do not permit emigrants to pass through it. Therefore, parties from Santa Fé, on their way to California, are compelled to make a circuit of near a thousand miles northward to the Salt Lake, or about the same distance southward by the route of the Gila. Although this valley is little known, there are indications that it is fertile and valuable. The name of the river "Colorado" is descriptive of its waters; they are as deeply colored as those of the Missouri or Red River, while those of the Gila, which we know flows through barren lands, are clear. It would seem impossible for a large river to collect sediment enough in a sandy, barren soil, to color its waters so deeply as to give it a name among those who first discovered and have since visited its shores. The probability, therefore, is, that this river flows through an alluvial valley of great fertility, which has never been explored. This conjecture is strengthened by the fact that the Indians who inhabit it are hostile, and oppose, as far as they can, all persons who attempt to enter or explore it. This has been their uniform course of conduct respecting all portions of the continent which have been fertile, abounding in game and the spontaneous productions of the earth. As this valley is situated in the direct route from Santa Fé to California, its thorough exploration becomes a matter of very great importance, especially as it is highly probable that the elevated regions to the north of it, covered with snow during most of the year, will force the line of the great national railway to the Pacific through some portion of it. The soil situated west of the Sierra Nevada, and embracing the plain of the Sacramento and San Joaquin, covers an area, as nearly as can be estimated, of between fifty and sixty thousand square miles, and would, under a proper system of cultivation, be capable of supporting a population equal to that of Ohio or New York at the present time.

The climate and soil of California are well suited to the growth of wheat, barley, rye, and oats. The temperature along the coast is too cool for the successful culture of maize as a field crop. The fact that oats, the species which is cultivated in the Atlantic States, are annually self-sown and produced on all the plains and hills along the coast, and as far inland as the sea-breeze has a marked influence on the climate, is sufficient proof that all the cereal grains may be successfully cultivated without the aid of irrigation. It is quite true that this auxiliary was extensively employed at the missions, and undoubtedly increased the product of all crops to which it was applied, as it will in any country on earth if skillfully used. This does not prove, however, that it was essentially necessary to the production of an ample reward to the husbandman. The experience of all the old inhabitants is sufficient evidence of this. If their imperfect mode of culture secured satisfactory returns, it is reasonable to presume that a more perfect system would produce greater results. There is abundant evidence to prove, that in the rich alluvial valleys, wheat and barley have produced from forty to sixty bushels from one bushel of seed, without irrigation. Irish potatoes, turnips, onions, in fact all the edible roots known and cultivated in the Atlantic States, are produced in great perfection. In all the valleys east of the coast range of hills, the climate is sufficiently warm to mature crops of Indian corn, rice, and probably tobacco. The cultivation of the grape has attracted much attention at the missions, among the residents of towns, and the rural population, and been attended with much success, wherever it has been attempted. The dry season secures the fruit from those diseases which are so fatal in the Atlantic States, and it attains very great perfection. The wine made from it is of excellent quality, very palatable, and can be produced in any quantity. The grapes are delicious, and produced with very little labor. When taken from the vines in bunches, and suspended in a dry room by the stems, they become partially dry, retain their flavor, and remain several weeks, perhaps months, without decay. Apples, pears, and peaches are cultivated with facility; and there is no reason to doubt that all the fruits of the Atlantic States can be produced in great plenty and perfection. The grasses are very luxuriant and nutritious, affording excellent pasture. The oats, which spring up the whole length of the sea-coast, and from forty to sixty miles inland, render the cultivation of that crop entirely unnecessary, and yield a very great quantity of nutritious food for horses, cattle, and sheep. The dry season matures, and I may say cures, these grasses and oats, so that they remain in an excellent state of preservation during the summer and autumn, and afford an ample supply of forage. While the whole surface of the country appears parched and vegetation destroyed, the numerous flocks and herds which roam over it continue in excellent condition. Although the mildness of the winter months and the fertility of the soil secure to California very decided agricultural advantages, it is admitted that irrigation would be of very great importance, and necessarily increase the products of the soil in quantity and variety during the greater part of the dry season. It should therefore be encouraged by government, in the survey and disposition of the public lands, as far as practicable. The farmer derives some very important benefits from the dry season. His crops in harvest-time are never injured by rain; he can with perfect confidence permit them to remain in his fields as long after they have been gathered as his convenience may require; he has no fears that they will be injured by wet or unfavorable weather. Hence it is that many who have long been accustomed to that climate prefer it to the changeable weather east of the Rocky Mountains.

As already stated, the forests of California south of latitude 39°, and west of the foot-hills of the Sierra Nevada, are limited to detached, scattering groves of oak in the valleys, and of red-wood on the ridges and on the gorges of the hills. It can be of no practical use to speculate on the causes which have denuded so large an extent of country, further than to ascertain whether the soil is or is not favorable to the growth of forest trees. When the dry season sets in, the entire surface is covered with a luxuriant growth of grass and oats, which, as the summer advances, become perfectly dry. The remains of all dead trees and shrubs also become dry. These materials, therefore, are very combustible, and usually take fire in the latter part of summer and beginning of autumn, which commonly passes over the whole country, destroying in its course the young shrubs and trees. In fact, it seems to be the same process which has destroyed or prevented the growth of forest trees on the prairies of the Western States, and not any quality in the soil unfriendly to their growth. The absence of timber and the continuance of the dry season are apt to be regarded by farmers, on first going into the country, as irremediable defects, and as presenting obstacles almost insurmountable to the successful progress of agriculture. A little experience will modify these opinions. It is soon ascertained that the soil will produce abundantly without manure; that flocks and herds sustain themselves through the winter without being fed at the farm-yard, and consequently no labor is necessary to provide forage for them; that ditches are easily dug, which present very good barriers for the protection of crops until live fences can be planted and have time to grow. Forest trees may be planted with little labor, and in very few years attain a sufficient size for building and fencing purposes. Time may be usefully employed in sowing various grain and root crops during the wet or winter season. There is no weather cold enough to destroy root crops, and therefore it is not necessary to gather them. They can be used or sold from the field where they grow. The labor, therefore, required in most of the old States to fell the forests, clear the land of rubbish, and prepare it for seed, may here be applied to other objects. All these things, together with the perfect security of all crops in harvest-time from injury by wet weather, are probably sufficient to meet any expense which may be incurred in irrigation, or caused for a time by a scanty supply of timber. In the northern part of the State, above latitude 39°, and on the hills which rise from the great plain of the Sacramento and San Joaquin to the foot of the Sierra Nevada, the forests of timber are beautiful and extensive, and would, if brought into use, be sufficiently productive to supply the wants of the southern and western portions of the State.

The extent and value of the public lands suitable for agricultural purposes in California cannot be ascertained with any degree of accuracy until some very important preliminary questions shall have been settled. It is not known whether the Jesuits who founded the missions, or their successors,* the Franciscans, ever did, or do now, hold any title from the Spanish crown to the lands which they occupied. Nor has any investigation been made to ascertain how far those titles, if they ever existed, have been invalidated by the acts of the priests or the decrees of the Mexican government. A superficial view of the matter would be very apt to lead to the supposition that the Jesuits, so celebrated for wisdom and foresight, would not fail to secure that which, at that time, would probably have been obtained by merely asking for it—a royal decree, granting to them all the lands they might require in that remote country for ecclesiastical purposes. There have been some intimations to that effect, but nothing is distinctly known. These missions embrace within their limits some of the most valuable lands in the State, and it is very important that it should be ascertained whether they belong to the government or may be justly claimed by individuals. Most of the land fit for cultivation south of latitude 39°, and west of the valley of the Sacramento and San Joaquin, is claimed under what purport to be grants from the Mexican government. On most of these grants the minerals and metals are reserved to the government; conditions were coupled with many of them which have not been complied with; in others, the boundaries described embrace two or three times as much land as the grant conveys. The Mexican law required all grants made by the provincial government, with few exceptions, to be confirmed by the supreme government. The great distance which separate them, and the unfrequent or difficult means of communication, made a compliance with the law so expensive and tardy that it came to be almost disregarded. There were other causes which led to this neglect. Previous to the treaty with Mexico and the immigration of American citizens to that country, land was not regarded as of much value, except for grazing purposes. There was room enough for all. Therefore, the claimants or proprietors did not molest one another, or inquire into the validity of titles. These extensive grants are described by natural boundaries, such as mountains, bays, and promontories, which, in many instances, might allow of a variation of several miles in the establishment of a corner with chain and compass. By the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the United States purchased all the rights and interests of Mexico to and in California. This purchase not only embraced all the lands which had not been granted by Mexico, but all the reserved minerals and metals, and also réversionary rights which might accrue to Mexico from a want of compliance on the part of the grantees with the conditions of their grants, or a want of perfection in the grants. The lands in the northern part of the State, above 39°, have not been explored or granted. They are supposed to embrace an area of about twenty millions of acres, a large portion of which is doubtless valuable for its timber and soil. Comparatively few grants have been obtained in the great valley of the Sacramento and San Joaquin. This vast tract, therefore, containing, as is estimated, from twelve to fifteen millions of acres, belongs mostly to the government. South of this valley and west of the Colorado, within the limits of California, as indicated in her constitution, there are said to be extensive tracts of valuable unappropriated land; and, on investigation, it will probably appear that there are many of them in detached bodies which have not been granted.

The gold region of California is between 400 and 500 miles long, and from 40 to 50 miles broad, following the line of the Sierra Nevada. Further discoveries may, and probably will, increase the area. It embraces within its limits those extensive ranges of hills which rise on the eastern border of the plain of the Sacramento and San Joaquin and, extending eastwardly from 50 to 60 miles, they attain an elevation of about 4,000 feet, and terminate at the base of the main ridge of the Sierra Nevada. There are numerous streams which have their sources in the springs of the Sierra, and receive the water from its melting snows, and that which falls in rain during the wet season. These streams form rivers, which have cut their channels through the ranges of foot-hills westwardly to the plain, and disembody into the Sacramento and San Joaquin. These rivers are from 10 to 15, and probably some of them 20 miles apart. The principal formation, or substratum, in these hills, is talcose slate; the superstratum, sometimes penetrating to a great depth, is quartz; this, however, does not cover the entire face of the country, but extends in large bodies in various directions—is found in masses and small fragments on the surface, and seen along the ravines, and in the mountains overhanging the rivers, and in the hill-sides in its original beds. It crops out in the valleys and on the tops of the hills, and forms a striking feature of the entire country over which it extends. From innumerable evidences and indications, it has come to be the universally-admitted opinion, among the miners and intelligent men who have examined this region, that the gold, whether in detached particles and pieces, or in veins, was created in combination with the quartz. Gold is not found on the surface of the country, presenting the appearance of having been thrown up and scattered in all directions by volcanic action. It is only found in particular localities, and attended by peculiar circumstances and indications. It is found in the bars and shoals of the rivers, in ravines, and in what are called the "dry diggings." The rivers, in forming their channels, or breaking their way through the hills, have come in contact with the quartz containing the gold veins, and by constant attrition cut the gold into fine flakes and dust; and it is found among the sand and gravel of their beds at those places where the swiftness of the current reduces it, in the dry season, to the narrowest possible limits, and where a wide margin is consequently left on each side, over which the water rushes, during the wet season, with great force. As the velocity of some streams is greater than that of others, so is the gold found in fine or coarse particles, apparently corresponding to the degree of attrition to which it has been exposed. The water from the hills and upper valleys, in finding its way to the rivers, has cut deep ravines, and, wherever it has come in contact with the quartz, has dissolved or crumbled it in pieces. In the dry season, these channels are mostly without water, and gold is found in the beds and margins of many of them in large quantities, but in a much coarser state than in the rivers, owing, undoubtedly, to the moderate flow and temporary continuance of the current, which has reduced it to smooth shapes, not unlike pebbles, but has not had sufficient force to cut it into flakes or dust. The dry diggings are places where quartz containing gold has cropped out, and been disintegrated, crumbled to fragments, pebbles, and dust by the action of water and the atmosphere. The gold has been left as it was made, in all imaginable shapes—in pieces of all sizes, from one grain to several pounds in weight. The evidences that it was created in combination with quartz, are too numerous and striking to admit of doubt or cavil; they are found in combination in large quantities.

A very large proportion of the pieces of gold found in these situations have more or less quartz adhering to them. In many specimens, they are so combined they cannot be separated without reducing the whole mass to powder, and subjecting it to the action of quicksilver. This gold, not having been exposed to the attrition of a strong current of water, retains in a great degree its original conformation. These diggings, in some places, spread over valleys of considerable extent, which have the appearance of an alluvion, formed by washings from the adjoining hills, of decomposed quartz and slate earth and vegetable matter. In addition to these facts, it is beyond doubt true that several vein-mines have been discovered in the quartz, from which numerous specimens have been taken, showing the minute connection between the gold and the rock, and indicating a value hitherto unknown in gold mining. These veins do not present the appearance of places where gold may have been lodged by some violent eruption. It is combined with the quartz in all imaginable forms and degrees of richness. The rivers present very striking, and it would seem, conclusive evidence respecting the quantity of gold remaining undiscovered in the quartz veins. It is not probable that the gold in the dry diggings and that in the rivers—the former in lumps, the latter in dust—were created by different processes. That which is found in the rivers has undoubtedly been cut or worn from the veins in the rock, with which their currents have come in contact. All of them appear to be equally rich. This is shown by the fact that a laboring man may collect nearly as much in one river as he can in another. They intersect and cut through the gold region, running from east to west, at irregular distances of fifteen to twenty, and perhaps some of them thirty miles apart. Hence it appears that the gold veins are equally rich in all parts of that most remarkable section of country. Were it wanting, there are further proofs of this in the ravines and dry diggings, which uniformly confirm what nature so plainly shows in the rivers.

The quicksilver mines of California are believed to be numerous, extensive, and valuable. Hitherto this metal, so useful in the arts and mining, has been chiefly derived from Spain and Mexico, and its production been a monopoly. The best known mine in California is that near San José, which is claimed by Mr. Forbes, of Tepic, in Mexico. The cinnabar ore which produce the mineral lies near the surface, is easily procured, and the mine is believed to have been remarkably productive. Discoveries of other like mines are reported in other parts of the State, but little is publicly known respecting them, the belief being, however, that quicksilver will be eventually found in sufficient quantities for all purposes of extensive mining operations, if not for export. It is, undoubtedly, a fortunate circumstance, that nature, in bestowing on this State such vast metallic wealth, has thus provided, almost in its immediate neighborhood, inexhaustible stores of the only agent by which gold can be successfully separated from its matrices. It is also believed that California is rich in silver, copper, iron, and coal. A silver mine has been discovered a short distance from Monterey, which affords a very rich ore, and has been productive in comparison to the labor bestowed in operating it. In the neighborhood of San Francisco bituminous coal is abundant, and the indications noted in many other sections leave no doubt of the great extent of coal formation in the State. With regard to other metals, time and circumstances are required to develop our knowledge of them; but there can be but one opinion on the subject, that California is, in one part or other of its territory, bounteously supplied with all the more useful as well as the precious metals.

California offers a very interesting and but partially explored field of research to the botanist. Almost every variety of vegetation, from the luxuriant productions of the tropics, to the stunted and scanty growth of the frozen regions, may be found in this country. The labors of Douglas and others have made known to the world many of the most valuable and remarkable species. Of these it is possible here to mention only a few. Of the pine and oak, there are several noble and useful varieties in different parts of the country. One of these, pinus Douglasii, first described by Douglas, is probably the grandest of the whole vegetable kingdom. It is found on the mountains about the Bay of San Francisco, and in some other sections of California, generally on elevated localities. Specimens of this tree occur of the height of 240 feet, the base of whose trunks have a circumference of nearly 60 feet. The trunk is quite destitute of branches, until above more than half the altitude, when they grow outward and upward in such a manner as to give the top the form of an inverted pyramid. From the ends of the branches hang the cones or seed-vessels, from 12 to 15 inches in length, and egg-shaped. The seeds are as large as a good sized bean, and furnish a common article of food to the Indians, who collect large quantities of them in the autumn, and pound them into a kind of cake, which is baked on heated stones. The wood is very fine-grained, and contains a great quantity of resin. The pinus Sabinii, p. Lambertiana, p. nobilis, and p. resinosa, are also fine species, though less in size than their gigantic relative. The former is, however, a large tree, being often found 110 feet high, and from 10 to 12 in diameter. Among the elevated plains of Upper California it grows quite plentifully, as also on the low hills, near the coast, where it attains a larger size. The natives frequently build their fires against these trees to save the trouble of collecting fuel; by this means, also, a sweet gum is made to exude from the trunk, which serves them for sugar. The white oak grows on the low and level parts of the country. It is not generally a large tree, being from 40 to 50 feet high, and from 2 to 3 feet in diameter at the base. The top is extremely thick and leafy, forming an almost impenetrable mass of boughs. It is in some places very abundant. The quercus navalis occupies the prairies, river banks, and lower hills, and is 4 or 5 feet in diameter, with branches of corresponding dimensions, extending horizontally from the trunk. The live oak (q. virens) grows only on the highlands. It is from 2 to 5 feet in thickness, and from 60 to 70 in height. The maple, the ash, the beech, the chestnut, in several varieties, compose large portions of the forests. It is impossible to give a full description of the flowering shrubs and plants of California, so great is their variety and beauty. A species of raspberry (ribes speciosum) is one of the most elegant flowering shrubs of the country. It is exceedingly abundant in some localities, and, with its long crimson stamens, and its deep green leaves, presents an appearance truly lovely. The flowers bloom early in spring. In many places are found several species of mimulus, one of which is from 3 to 4 feet in height, and is a very showy plant. This country also has numerous species of phlox and heuchera, and innumerable quantities of epilobium, anemone, or primrose, pentstemon, papaver, or poppy, delphinium, and salvia. A species of lily also grows here, the roots of which are eaten by the natives. The Scilla esculenta grows along the whole coast; this is called by the natives "quamash," and the root forms a very common article of food. To prepare this for eating, a hole is made in the ground, and a number of stones placed in it, on which a fire is kindled and kept burning until they are made hot, when the fire is extinguished, and the roots, wrapped in straw, leaves, and moss, are placed upon them. They are well roasted in a few hours, and are then taken off and hung up to dry. This root is also sometimes pounded and made into cakes, which are preserved for future use; the taste is sweet, and rather agreeable, but if eaten too freely they are apt to produce diarrhoea. This plant is most abundant on the banks of rivers and on lowlands by the margins of forests, in which localities are also found several species of pyrola, caprifolium and lupinus, which sometimes cover an immense extent of land. The arbutus is also abundant in similar situations. The large species (a. procera), is a fine shrub frequently attaining a growth which entitles it to be called a tree. The a. uca ursi is found in almost every part of the colder sections of the country, and its berries are frequently eaten by the natives, and even by travelers. A very useful plant to the natives is the helonias tenax, the fibres of which are stronger than any hemp. Cords made of this are used by the Indians for the purpose of snaring deer and other animals, and one the thickness of the little finger is so strong as not to be broken by the largest elk. The gooseberry grows in California, and bears plentifully. The sand-hills and moors are covered with a great variety of syngenesious plants, and on the more fertile and humid soil grows a gaudy-flowered currant-bush, and a pretty species of honeysuckle. Perhaps the most remarkable shrub here is the yedra, a poisonous plant, which, however, affects some particular constitutions only. By contact with the skin, it produces tumors and violent inflammation. It is a slender shrub, preferring cool and shady places, and bearing a trefoil crenated leaf. Two roots—the plants of which are very beautiful—are used by the natives for soap; these are called amole and samate. On the rocky coast of Monterey are immense collections of sea-weed, fucus pyriformis, which are said to have gathered there in such abundance as to have saved several vessels from splitting on the rocks, when driven on them by the tempest.

The animal kingdom in California is made up of most of the zoological varieties found east of the Rocky Mountains, and of some few species peculiar to the region itself. The black bear (ursus Americanus) is an inhabitant of many districts, and in its habits and appearance differs little from its congener of the north; the barren-ground bear (ursus arcticus) is of a lighter color, but in every other respect similar to the black bear; the grizzly bear (ursus ferax) is also a denizen, and is the most formidable wild animal of the country. The Polar bear (ursus maritimus) is sometimes seen on the northern coast, but is evidently a stranger, borne down on floating ice from the higher latitudes. The raccoon (procyon lotor), the American badger (meles californicus), the glutton or wolverine (gulo luscus), the common weasel (mustela vulgaris), the ermine (m. erminea), the mink, martin, and skunk, are found in various parts, and are valuable for their furs. In many parts wolves are very numerous. The species mostly seen are the common wolf (lupus Americanus), the gray wolf (l. griseus), the dusky wolf (l. nubilis), the black wolf (l. ater), and the prairie wolf (canis latrans). Foxes are common, and of these two species exist, the red fox (canis fulvus) and the gray fox (c. cinereo-argentatus). Of the cat tribe there are several species, as the cougar or puma (felis concolor), the northern lynx (f. canadensis), the banded lynx (f. fuscata), and the red lynx (f. rufa). These inhabit mostly the dense forests and thickly-wooded sides of the mountains, preying on deer and other animals. In the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, as well as on many parts of the coast, the common hair seal (phoca vitellina) is abundant, and follows the track of the salmon. The beaver (castor fiber) and the musk rat (fiber zebethicus) are also common, especially at the confluence of the Sacramento with the Bay. The quality of the fur of these latter animals, however, is inferior to that obtained more to the north. The moose (cervus alces) is found in all the woody and mountain regions, and near the coast, and the elk (cervus canadensis) roams through the valleys in immense herds. There are many other species of deer found in various parts, as the black-tailed deer (c. macrotis), the long-tailed or jumping deer (c. leucurus), etc.; and the prong-horned antelope (a. ferocifer) is found in considerable numbers. The mountain sheep, or argali (ovis montana), inhabits the loftiest and coldest mountains; in its general appearance it resembles the large domestic sheep, but has horns out of all proportion to its body, and is covered with a coarse short hair, of a dingy brown color, which can scarcely be called wool. The bison (bos Americanus) is seldom seen, but is not altogether unknown to the hunter. The sea otter (lutra marina) is abundant along the coast, and at the mouths of rivers, and the land otter (l. Braziliensis) is found in many parts of the country. Of rats, mice, marmots, hares, rabbits, and squirrels, there are numerous species in all parts of the country.

Among the feathered tribes of California, the first worthy of notice is the great vulture (sarcoramphos Californianus), second only to the huge condor of South America, and closely allied to it in many respects. It is met with along the whole coast; it is solitary in its habits, rapacious, of enormous size, and singular in conformation and appearance, and seems to hold the same position in the scenery of this country as its European congener, the lammergeyer, in that of the Alps. It builds in the highest trees of the mountain forests, and only approaches the valleys in search of its carrion food. When full grown, it measures about 4 feet 8 inches from beak to end of the tail, and from 9 to 10 feet from tip to tip of its wings. Its color is brownish black, the bill and legs yellow, and its quills are much esteemed by the hunter for making tubes for his pipe. The turkey buzzard (cathartes aura) is also found here, but is not common, but the black vulture (cathartes atratus) is found in every part. The golden eagle (aquila chrysolus), the bald eagle (aquila leucocephala), the osprey or fish-hawk (aquila haliaea), the black hawk or peregrine falcon (falco peregrinus), the jer-falcon (falco islandicus), and several others of kindred species, but of lesser note, are found here, as the sparrow-hawk, the pigeon-hawk, and the gos-hawk—the latter identical with the European species so celebrated in the royal sport of falconry. Owls of various species are found throughout the country; and among the birds common to the temperate region of the continent may be mentioned the shrike, the robin, the cat-bird, the thrush, the lark, the red-wing, the cross-bill, the raven, the magpie, the jay, the wood-pecker in numerous varieties and species. In some parts of the south the humming-bird is quite numerous, and swallows of every description—barn, cliff, and bank swallows—are as common as in any other section of the Union. There is probably no other country which produces so many varieties of grouse, or in so great numbers. The bays, inlets, and rivers are alive with water-fowl, and the low lands near the outlets of some of the streams in the Pacific coast actually swarm with geese, ducks, widgeons, teal, cranes, curlews, snipes, and various other waders and swimmers. The swan (cygnus buccinator) is the largest swimming bird of the country, and seems to differ nothing from the same species elsewhere. The white pelican (p. onocrotalus) is found on the coast, and large numbers frequent the bays and harbors. Off the coast, too, may be seen the mighty albatross; specimens of enormous size are sometimes seen, measuring 4 feet in length and 10 or 12 across the wings.

The waters of California are replete with fish of every size and variety. The seas swarm densely, and the bays and rivers are alive with their peculiar denizens. The California Gulf produces great numbers of edible shell-fish. The oyster, the pearl-shell, the muscle, several species of halibut, all afford either food or articles of trade and ornament to the inhabitants. In California fish are generally little sought after, the productions of the earth being so numerous and plentiful; but in the colder regions of the north they afford the common, and sometimes the sole subsistence of the natives. In the Columbia, as well as in the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers, and in almost every water-course having its outlet in the sea, the number of (salmo) salmon are almost incredible. On some of these rivers from two to three thousand are sometimes taken in a single day. The Indians sometimes capture them with a kind of wicker basket similar to that used by the fishermen on the Atlantic coast for taking lobsters. This is done in the spring, when the fish are on their passage up the stream. They are also taken with the spear, which consists of a sharp piece of bone fastened to the end of a shaft of wood 12 or 15 feet in length, and which the Indians use with great dexterity, frequently securing salmon of from 20 to 30 pounds in weight. The fish are dried or salted, and preserved for future use. They are also sometimes taken with only a small scoop net, fastened to the end of a pole. Douglas speaks of an individual measured by him which was 3 feet 5 inches long, and 10 inches broad, weighing 35 pounds. This size is not exaggerated, specimens nearly or quite as large having often been seen. Some of the streams also abound with very fine salmon-trout, and with a small trout nearly resembling the one which affords so much sport to the anglers of the older States. The sturgeon (accipenser transmontanus) sometimes attains great size in the large rivers, being from 8 to 10 feet in length, and weighing nearly 500 pounds. In general, however, this fish is of much smaller dimensions. It is principally found not far from the mouths of the rivers. In the Bay of Monterey is a species of mackerel (seomber colias) in great plenty, and easily taken. Here, as well as in most other parts of the coast, also swim schools of a small fish resembling, if not identical with, the sardine of Italy, familiar to epicures. These are sometimes seen in such immense numbers that the surface of the water for a great distance around resembles a living mass, being kept in constant commotion by their fins. Porpoises are very numerous in almost every bay on the whole coast, and in foul weather may always be seen playing their pranks on the waves, while far in the offing appears the spouting of the huge whale. The halibut, pilchard, skate, turbot, bonito, and many other species, are found in various parts of the sea-coast. The shell-fish are numerous and valuable, particularly in the gulf. Of these may be mentioned, oysters, which are often of large size and excellent flavor; muscles, several species of haliotis, patella, cardium, and turbo, besides the pearl oyster (mya margaritifera), the product of which, as an article of commerce, is well known. The pearls produced by these shell-fish are in this country of very fine water, though rather irregular in figure.

The estimates and ascertainment by census, of the population, resources, and productions of California have hitherto been very incomplete, and in reference to the population returned by the federal census of 1850, it can scarcely be considered as an approximation. The estimate made by General Douglass, of the State Senate, in the fall of the year 1850, is perhaps more nearly accurate, and is given below for what it is worth. The population by the census of 1850 is that returned to the Legislature by the census agent. The returns of 1852 are those of a census instituted by the State authorities, and those which will be adopted by the U. S. census department in the official exhibit of the condition of the State.

The following are the population returns referred to:

—Humboldt County, from Trinity, and San Bernardino County, from Los Angeles, are counties erected since 1852.

The following summary of the census of the State in 1852, is abstracted from the report of W. Van Voorhies, Secretary of State, to the governor, and dated 25th January, 1853: "Immediately after the adjournment of the last Legislature active measures were commenced, which have been prosecuted up to the present time, for the purpose of making a correct and complete exhibit of the population and resources of the State. This object, however, has been but imperfectly accomplished, in consequence, in some degree, of the intrinsic difficulties of so complicated and extensive an undertaking in a new and comparatively unknown country, but mainly owing to the mixed, unsettled, and fluctuating character of our population, the difficulty of thoroughly exploring the mountain counties, the hostile tribes of Indians infesting some sections, and the mistaken supposition on the part of many that the business of the census agent was in some way connected with taxation. Believing that the occasion of taking this census afforded an opportunity which might not be again soon enjoyed, of procuring interesting geographical, geological, mineralogical, and other information pertaining to the natural curiosities and features of the State, I embraced it, and instructed each of the census agents to collect whatever of notable objects might come within their observation. These instructions not having been received by some of them until they were far advanced in their labor, were only carried out in a portion of the counties. A number of the counties, however, are represented in this particular and much useful and interesting intelligence collected on these subjects. Even from the imperfect showing which is thereby made, it will be seen that our State contains within her borders almost every variety of minerals and many most inviting fields of investigation to the natural philosopher, the antiquary, and the statesman.

"A large number of the most important counties having failed to furnish any information on these subjects, we are left to conclude that much of the most useful and interesting matter in this branch remains yet to be developed.

"Population.—It will be observed that the county of El Dorado has not been as yet returned, either as respects population or productions. This is admitted to be one of the most populous and productive counties of the State. The vote cast in this county at the late general election was, as appears from the returns on file in this office, 11,252; and judging from the relation generally obtaining in this State between the vote and population, it should contain 40,000 inhabitants. This county cast a vote of 2,344 greater than any other county in the State. The county of San Francisco, with a population of 36,151, casts 8,408 votes. The county of Yuba, with a population of 20,005, casts a vote of 4,276. The county of Nevada, with a population of 21,365, casts a vote of 5,474. The county of Calaveras, with a population of 20,192, casts a vote of 5,132. The county of El Dorado, therefore, which cast a vote of 11,252, I set down as containing a population of 40,000; which is, in fact, an under estimate, preserving the parallel exhibited in other counties between the number of votes and inhabitants. Estimating the population of El Dorado at 40,000, makes the entire population of the State 264,435. This appears from the actual returns of the census, with the exception of El Dorado County, and the data upon which I have based the estimate of that county are given above. There can be no doubt, however, that in consequence of the difficulties previously mentioned, not more than five-sixths of the whole population of the State has been taken. The reports of all the census agents who have made returns, set forth the fact of their inability to obtain the whole population of their respective counties; adding then one-sixth to the population returned and that estimated for El Dorado County, gives the population of the State at 308,507, which is believed to be about correct. Our entire popular vote at the late general election was 76,890, according to the election returns on file in this office, estimating the population at four times the amount of the popular vote, which is below the ratio usually obtaining throughout this State, and far below that obtaining in other States of the Union, places our population at 307,560. This exhibit shows an increase in the course of two years, taking the actual returns of the census, of 99,435, an annual increase of 49,717, and an increase of 30 per cent. per annum; of the increase per cent. per annum, the United States, according to the late census, was 3½, showing a difference of increase between the State of California and the other States of the Union of 26¼ per cent. per annum. Taking, however, the estimated and more probable census of the State, namely, 808,507, and it gives an annual positive increase of 71,753, an increase of 43 per cent. per annum, and a difference of increase per cent. between California and other States of 39¼.

"In this estimate the county of El Dorado is not included, which will probably add to the whites 30,000; to the citizens of the United States over 21 years of age 12,000; to the negroes 200; to the mulattoes 50; to the Indians 1,000; and to the foreign residents 5,000—making a final total of whites, 210,853; citizens over 21 years of age, 105,344; negroes, 2,090; mulattoes, 572; Indians (domesticated), 33,539; foreign residents, 59,991.

"The counties of Nevada, Placer, and Yuba have reported 9,809 Chinese. The other counties have embraced them without discrimination under the general head of foreign residents, the number is believed to approximate 25,000.

"Productions and Capital.—Under this head, I regret to state, that not only the county of El Dorado, entire, but that of Calaveras, also, in part, two of the most wealthy and productive of the State, have to be omitted, not having as yet been returned.

"A few of the counties have reported on the subjects of horticulture, manufactures, milling, farming, and farming utensils, separately, while the others have combined them under the general head of 'capital employed for other purposes.'

"The following items are not included under the general head above mentioned:

Capital employed in stock, farming, and gardening.....	$1,857,502 00
" " fruits and orchards.....	366,910 00
" " improvements and real estate.....	6,348,346 00
" " farming utensils.....	125,940 00
" " milling.....	240,550 00

—making the total capital employed for purposes other than those specified under general heads $49,500,951. Estimate of El Dorado and Calaveras counties, 10,000,000—making $59,500,951.

"The articles of sheep, hogs, and poultry, although not specifically required by law, have been reported upon from twenty counties, and are as follows: sheep, 82,567, at $12 each—$994,404; hogs, 35,976, at $10 each—$359,760; poultry, 96,280, at $2 each—192,460; total value, $1,576,624.

"For the number of horses, mules, cows, beef cattle, work oxen, bushels of barley, oats, wheat, potatoes, corn, acres of land in cultivation, quartz-mills, capital invested in quartz mining, capital invested in Placer mining, capital invested in other mining, and capital employed for other purposes, reference is made to the statistics of different counties respectively.

"The following is the estimated value of the live-stock and agricultural products. These prices are given at an average much below the market value:

Live-stock.		Agricultural Products.
Horses..... at $30.....	$1,943,190 00	Barley..... at $1 40 per bushel.....	$3,163,227 00
Mules..... at 50.....	828 900 00	Oats..... at 1 00 ".....	100,497 00
Cows..... at 50.....	5,216,950 00	Wheat..... at 2 40 ".....	652,231 00
Beef cattle.. at 25.....	7,884,800 00	Potatoes..... at 1 50 ".....	2,089,755 00
Work oxen. at 50.....	1,453,250 00	Corn..... at 2 50 ".....	156,330 00
$17,327,090 00		$6,162,040 00

Estimate for El Dorado and Calaveras	5,000,000	Estimate for El Dorado mining	2,500,000
			$108,520,651

"In the above estimate it will be observed that the value of no land except that in actual cultivation is included.

"With these facts now before us, it may not be uninteresting or devoid of utility to take a comparative view of our position in reference to the other States of the Union.

"Horses.—In these we are in advance of fifteen of the States. Mules.—In these we are in advance of twenty-six of the States. Milch Cows.—In these we are in advance of twelve of the States. Work Oxen.—In these we are in advance of eight of the States. Sheep.—In these, although having returns from only twenty counties, we are in advance of four States. Swine.—In these, although only twenty counties have reported, we are in advance of three States. Value of Live-stock.—In this we surpass twenty-two of the States. Barley.—In this we are only equaled by one State, New York. We raise more than one-half as much of this article as is produced in the whole Union besides. Potatoes.—In this again we stand next to New York, and raise one-fifth the quantity produced by the balance of the Union. Wheat.—In this we surpass ten of the States. Oats.—In this we cultivate more than three-fourths of our sister States. Indian Corn.—We produce less of this than any State of the Union. Beans.—In this we surpass nine of the States, notwithstanding only five counties have reported the quantity produced. Hay.—In this, though not returned from more than one-half counties, we exceed nine of the States. Fruits.—In these we excel all the States in variety, and one-half in quantity produced. Mining.—In this branch of industry we stand not only without a parallel, but without a competitor. Agriculture.—This important branch has been comparatively but little attended to in this State, and consequently in the value of cultivated land we are surpassed by all the States of the Union. The fact, however, that we excel most of them in the productions of the soil, shows the fertility and productiveness of our lands in a most favorable light. Trade.—Yolo, Trinity, Sutter, Santa Cruz, San Diego, Sacramento, and Nevada counties have reported merchandise to the amount of $4,000,000. The remainder of the counties have included this item, with others, under the general head of 'Capital' employed for other purposes—in these, too, we surpass more than one-half the States. Minerals.—The many interesting geological developments made by the census, place our State far in advance of all her sisters in the variety and importance of these great handmaids of science and civilization. Many matters of interest are touched upon in the reports of the different agents, which, on account of their isolated character, could not be arranged under general heads and classified. I have, therefore, endeavored to supply this defect by reference to them in this manner. It is needless to say the estimates submitted in this report are not claimed to be entirely accurate, but sufficiently so for practicable purposes. They will be found, I think, to present no exaggerated representation of our resources."

VALLEJO is the capital of the State; the Legislature of 1853, however, sat at Benicia.

CHAMPLAIN lake, N. Y. and Verm.: this fine sheet of water lies between the States of New York and Vermont, and penetrates a few miles beyond the line of the United States into Canada. Its length is about 140 m., and its width from 1 mile to 10 miles. The direction of its length is nearly N. and S., and it contains a large number of small islands, most of which belong to Vermont. From Whitehall to Crown Point the lake is quite narrow, but at the latter point it begins to expand, and soon becomes three miles wide, still increasing in width northward, until near Burlington it attains its greatest spread. Steamboats of the first class, and vessels of 100 tons navigate the lake from end to end, and may pass the Sorel or Richlieu, its outlet to St. Johns, where steamboat navigation ceases. The lake is connected southward with the navigable waters of the Hudson by means of the Champlain Canal, 63 miles long. As the centre of the lake is approached, a large body of water presents itself to view, bordered by scenery of the most picturesque description. The headlands are seen to great advantage, and the vast range of mountains on either side is truly a scene of grandeur seldom witnessed. The highest peak of the Green Mountains, the Camel's Rump, is seen on the east, while the high range of mountains of Essex County loom boldly above the western horizon. This latter range of mountain peaks contains the highest land of the State of New York, and rises in some instances to the height of 5,000 feet and upward, the forests covering it swathed in clouds; streams leap from their sides, and cascades of great beauty foam from their crevices. The immediate shores of the lake have numerous indentations and bays of singular beauty; fish abound in the waters, and the angler nowhere else can so well enjoy the pleasures of the "gentle art" than here. Salmon, salmon-trout, sturgeon, pickerel, etc., of the finest flavor, abound through the whole length of this delightful lake.

CHARLESTON, p. city, port of entry, and cap. Charleston dist., S. Car.: on a tongue of land formed by the meeting of Cooper and Ashley rivers in Charleston Harbor, 101 m. S. E. Columbia. Lat. 32° 46' 33" N., and long. 79° 57' 27" W. from Greenwich, or 2° 55' 57" W. from Washington.

The bay, or Charleston Harbor, is a large estuary, with an average width of 2 m., and extends about 7 m. S. E. from Charleston to the Atlantic Ocean, which it enters between Sullivan's and Morrison's islands. Cooper and Ashley rivers are from 30 to 40 feet deep, the former being 1,400, and the latter 2,100 yards wide opposite the city, and both are capable of accommodating the largest class of vessels. A sand-bar extends across the mouth of the harbor, but it has several channel entrances, the deepest of which, passing very close to Sullivan's Island, admits vessels drawing 16 feet water at high tide. The harbor is open to easterly winds, and vessels are much exposed during storms from that quarter—so much so, indeed, that they were at one time prohibited by law from lying at the wharves from the last of July to the middle of September. The fortifications protecting Charleston, are Fort Moultrie, on Sullivan's Island, Castle Pinckney, 2 m. below the city, and Fort Johnson, about 4 m. below.

The ground upon which Charleston is built is low, only elevated 8 or 9 feet above the level of the harbor at high tide, which here rises about 6 feet, flowing by the city with a strong current, and thus contributing to the salubrity of a location naturally unhealthy. The city has several times been inundated by the waters driven up the harbor by violent winds, and has from this cause at various times suffered considerable damage. The years 1699, 1723, 1752, and 1797 are noted in the history of the city as periods of these devastating occurrences. The streets are laid out rectilinearly, running east and west, from the rivers north and south, forming nearly square blocks. The width of the streets varies from 35 to 70 feet. Most of the buildings of the city are of brick, and the dwellings are in general of elegant construction. The streets are lined with the pride of India, while elegant villas, adorned with verandahs reaching from the ground to the tops of the houses, surrounded by green edges, and buried in the rich foliage of orange trees, magnolias, and palmettoes, give an air of wealth and elegance to the city. Charleston is divided into four wards, and is governed by a mayor and 12 aldermen. Among the public buildings, are the City Hall, the Exchange, the District Court House, the jail, two arsenals, a theatre, the U. S. Custom House, the Halls of the College of Charleston, between 30 and 40 churches, several high schools, and buildings devoted to benevolent purposes, as the alms-houses, the orphan asylum. The Literary and Philosophical Society has a fine collection of objects of natural history, etc.; the Academy of Fine Arts possesses some valuable paintings, and the City Library contains about 24,000 volumes. The College of Charleston is one of the most flourishing institutions of the Southern States, and has an efficient staff, consisting of a president and six professors; it was founded in 1783, and in 1850 had 70 students. The Medical College of the State of South Carolina was founded in 1833; in 1850 it had 8 professors and 153 students. The list of free school pupils is 394, and the average cost of instruction $10 per annum; these are valuable schools, but are inadequate for so large a city. There is also a High School, founded in 1839, which averages from 130 to 150 pupils. It is endowed with $1,000 a year for 100 years by the council. The number of grammar schools and academies, which are open only to pay scholars, are pretty numerous, and these are usually efficient institutions, at which the best classical and mathematical education can be had.

The public press of Charleston consists of four daily papers: the "Sun" (neutral), the "C. News" (dem.), the "C. Mercury" (dem.), and the "C. Courier" (neutral): of the latter a tri-weekly edition is also issued; four weekly papers, the "Southern Literary Gazette," the "Southern Baptist," the "Catholic Miscellany," and the "Southern Christian Advocate;" three monthly periodicals, the "Gospel Messenger," the "School-Fellow" (educational), and the "Masonic Miscellany;" and one bi-monthly, the "Medical Journal." Many of these are publications exhibiting a high order of talent, and have circulations beyond the locality. The "Medical Journal" is a work of world-wide renown, and has among its contributors the highest names among Southern physicians.

The city of Charleston is one of the most ancient in the Union. Its foundations were laid in 1672. In 1677 it was called Oyster Point Town; in 1680 New Charlestown, and in 1682 New Charleston. It was chartered as a city in 1783. At an early period of its history it attracted a considerable population from Barbadoes, and received large accessions of French Huguenots. "On the spot," says Bancroft, "where opulence now crowds the wharves of the most prosperous mart on our Southern sea-board, among ancient groves that swept down the river's banks, and were covered with yellow jasmine which burdened the verdant zephyrs with its perfumes, the city was begun." Two centuries have nearly been completed since its foundation, and momentous have been the events and changes within that lapse of time. In 1731—we have it on the authority of an old historian—there were 690 houses in Charleston, 5 handsome churches, and that out of the city were to be found courtly, stately buildings, noble castles, etc. The advantages of the location were early appreciated, and it soon became a place of considerable trade. Its first exports were staves, lumber, furs, and peltries, rice (first planted 1698), to which were added in 1747 indigo, in 1782 tobacco, and in 1790 cotton. At the present time its great exports are rice and cotton. Of cotton, the receipts from the interior in 1850 were 400,714 bales, and of sea-land, 17,994 bales, and the exports were 365,327 bales upland, and 16,437 bales sea-land; and the receipts of rice amounted to 147,690 barrels, and the exports to 134,417 barrels. The foreign commerce of Charleston, however, has not progressed equally with its coasting trade; and many reasons might be assigned for this, but none so weighty as the fault of its own inhabitants in preferring the employment of the shipping of other States, and neglecting its own facilities for ship-building. It has consequently become a tributary to Northern ports, and instead of reaping the benefits of a foreign navigation of its own, has been constantly heaping up the coffers of its Northern neighbors. At present, indeed, the great bulk of its staples are carried coastwise to New York, and thence shipped to foreign countries. In the year 1849-50, ending 30th June, the clearances to foreign ports amounted only to 351 vessels (121,867 tons), and its direct entrances to only 303 vessels (96,619 tons), a proportion quite inadequate for the transportation of so large a commercial material as that supplied from the back country, of which the port is the only outlet. The registered shipping of the port at this period consisted of 15,377 tons, and the shipping employed in the coasting trade, of 17,916 tons. The coastwise trade of Charleston in comparison with this is immensely greater. In 1848 the arrivals were 63 steamships, 228 ships, 196 brigs, 398 schooners, 8 sloops, and 739 steamboats; and the clearances were 61 steamships, 163 ships, 177 brigs, 369 schooners, 7 sloops, and 731 steamboats. At the same period, and of the above amount, the following were regular packets plying between Charleston and other ports of the Union: Boston, 6 vessels (1,371 tons); New York, 28 vessels (11,027 tons); Philadelphia, 13 vessels (2,950 tons); Providence, 2 vessels (346 tons); Baltimore, 6 vessels (600 tons); Wilmington, 4 vessels (1,538 tons); Savannah, 4 vessels (1,070 tons); and New Orleans, 7 vessels (1,627 tons); the remainder being made up of transient traders. Of this number, 5 were steamships, 11 ships, 9 barks, 24 brigs, 1 ketch, 26 schooners, and 8 steamboats. There are also engaged in the pilotage of the bar, 13 full branch pilots and 8 second branch pilots, employing 9 pilot boats, with an aggregate of about 400 tons.

There is at Charleston a Floating Dry Dock—one of the best of its kind in the Union; it is the balance dock of Gilbert, and was built in 1845 by James Marsh. Its length is 160 feet, its width 52 feet, and its depth 20 feet, and its capacity 1,500 tons. The operations of the dock are performed by a steam-engine.

The South Carolina R. R. is the great conduit of the commerce of Charleston to and from the interior. It extends from Charleston to Augusta, 136 miles, and has numerous connections (feeders), westward and northward, through which an immense amount of merchandise is carried to and fro. It has also the advantages of a canal 22 miles long, which connects the harbor with the Santee river, and by means of the railroads now building, it will have access to the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. Already its railroad facilities extend from Charleston to Nashville, Tenn., 598 miles, and to Montgomery, Ala., 482 miles.

Charleston has seven banks, with an aggregate capital of $9,500,000, and five insurance companies, with capitals in the aggregate amounting to $4,500,000; also a provident institution for savings. The Bank of the State of South Carolina is the fiscal agent of the State, and holds, besides its capital of $1,123,357, the deposits of the State funds.

The population of Charleston in 1790 was 16,359; in 1800, 18,711; in 1810, 24,711; in 1820, 24,780; in 1830, 30,259; in 1840, 29,261, and 1850, 42,955. This is exclusive of St. Philip's parish, or the neck, which is, however, virtually a part of Charleston, and contains about 16,000 inhabitants.

CHARLESTON, p. v., Bradley co., Tenn.: on the S. side of the Hiwassee r., 123 m. E. S. E. Nashville. The East Tennessee and Georgia R. R. passes the v. 40 m. from Dalton.

CHARLESTON FOUR CORNERS, p. o., Montgomery co., N. Y.: 32 m. W. by N. Albany.

CHARLESTOWN, p. v., Franklin co., Ark.: on Arkansas r., 108 m. W. N. W. Little Rock.

CHARLESTOWN, t. and p. o., Middlesex co., Mass.: on a peninsula between Charles and Mystic rivers, and connected with Boston, etc., by bridges. The c. contains the Massachusetts State Prison, situated on Prison Point, the U. S. Navy Yard, etc. Breed's Hill, where the noted battle was fought, 17th June, 1775, lies immediately behind the v., and this great event is commemorated by a granite obelisk (Bunker Hill Monument). The t. has considerable manufactures, trade, and commerce; and a newspaper, the "Bunker Hill Aurora," is here published weekly. Charleston may be considered as a portion of the metropolitan district, of which Boston is the centre. Pop. 17,216.

CHARLESTOWN, p. v., Cecil co., Md.: on the W. side of North-East r., 5 m. from Chesapeake Bay, and 49 m. N. E. Annapolis. The Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore R. R. passes near the v., 57 m. from Philadelphia, and 41 m. from Baltimore.

CHATTAHOOCHEE, p. v., Gadsden co., Flor.: on the E. side of Appalachicola r., immediately below the union of Chattahoochee and Flint rivers.

CHATTAHOOCHEE river, Ga. and Ala.: it has its rise in the Appalachee Mountains, and for a great part of its course forms the boundary line between Georgia and Alabama, forming ultimately the largest constituent of the Appalachicola r. Steamboats ascend it to Columbus, and boating is carried much farther up.

CHATTANOOGA, p. v., Hamilton co., Tenn.: on the S. bank of Tennessee r., 119 m. E. S. E. Nashville. At this point the Nashville and Chattanooga R. R. forms a junction with the Western and Atlantic R. R., 151 m. from Nashville, and 311 from Augusta. A railroad is also in progress from hence to Charleston, on the East Tennessee and Georgia R. R. This point, indeed, is destined to become the entrepôt of an immense inland commerce, reaching to the Atlantic sea-board on the one hand and beyond the Mississippi and Ohio on the other. Two newspapers are published weekly, the "C. Gazette" (whig), and the "C. Advertiser" (dem.) Pop. about 3,000.

CHATTOOGA county, Ga. Situate N. W., and contains 420 sq. m. Drained by Chattooga r., a branch of Coosa r. Surface elevated, hilly, and rugged, and the soils generally indifferent—on the streams fertile. Wheat, corn, and cotton are the chief products. Farms 419; manuf. 10; dwell. 869, and pop.—wh. 5,131, fr. col. 4, sl. 1,680—total 6,815. Capital: Summerville.

CHATTOOGAVILLE, p. v., Chattooga co., Ga.: 148 m. N. W. Milledgeville.

CHAUMONT, p. v., Jefferson co., N. Y.: at the head of Chaumont Bay, 149 m. N. W. Albany. It has unrivaled water-power and great facilities for lake commerce, its harbor being spacious and of easy access. It is also celebrated for its fisheries and for the quantity of blue limestone found in its vicinity. The Cape Vincent R. R. passes through the village, 86 m. from Rome. Pop. about 400.

CHAUMONT bay, N. Y.: a fine open bay near the outlet of Lake Ontario. It is of an irregular shape, about 7 m. long and 2 m. wide, and receives Chaumont r. The fisheries of the bay are very valuable, and it abounds in all the descriptions found in the lake of which it is an arm.

CHAUMONT river, N. Y.: this stream rises in Jefferson County, and flows almost directly south, to its confluence with Chaumont Bay. It is only 15 or 16 m. in length, but affords abundance of hydraulic power.

CHAUNCEY, p. v., Athens co., Ohio: on the N. side of Hoeking r. and canal, 76 m. S. E. Columbus.

CHAUTAUQUE county, N. Y. Situate S. W. on Lake Erie, and contains 1,017 sq. m. Drained by Chautauque Lake, and a large number of streams flowing to Allegheny r. An elevated ridge traverses the county 4 or 5 m. distant from Lake Erie, forming the watershed. Surface finely varied, and the soils, even to the hill-tops, open to cultivation. Bog iron, copperas, alum, marl, etc., abound, and there are sulphur springs and a hydrogen spring, which at Fredonia, Westfield, and Van Buren Harbor, are used to illuminate—the gas burning equal to coal gas. Farms 5,163; manuf. 510; dwell. 9,074, and pop.—wh. 50,358, fr. col. 135—total 50,493. Capital: Mayville. Public Works: New York and Erie R. R., and Buffalo and State Line R. R.

CHAUTAQUE VALLEY, p. o., Alleghany co., N. Y.: 213 m. W. S. W. Albany.

CHAUTAQUE lake, N. Y.: a most beautiful sheet of water in the county of the same name. It is 18 m. in length, and varies in breadth from 1 to 3 m., except near the middle, where it contracts to a few rods in width. It empties into Conewango cr. Its elevation is 726 feet above the surface of Lake Erie, and 1,291 above the ocean, being the most elevated lake in the Union on which steamboats ply.

CHAUTAQUE river, N. Y.: a tributary of Lake Erie, from the county of the same name. It flows through a deep ravine, and in its course furnishes excellent mill sites.

CHAZY, t. and p. v., Clinton co., N. Y.: on Chazy r., 146 m. N. Albany. The village is situate about 3 m. W. of Lake Champlain, on which is also a village called Chazy Landing. Pop. 4,324.

CHEHALEM river, Oreg.: a large r. from the E., formed by the union of the Skukumchuck and Newaukum rivers, and falling into Gray's Harbor.

CHELMSFORD, t. and p. v., Middlesex co., Mass.: on the S. side of Merrimac r., 24 m. N. W. Boston. The town abounds in granite and limestone, and has several manufactures, among which are those of glass and iron. The Middlesex Canal passes through the town, and it has several railroads on its borders, connecting it with the towns on all sides. Lowell was taken from Chelmsford in 1824. Pop. 2,098.

CHELSEA, p. v., Mill co., Ill.: 143 m. N. E. Springfield.

CHELSEA, p. v., Washtenaw co., Mich.: 52 m. S. E. Lansing.

CHELSEA, t. and p. v., Suffolk co., Mass.: 3 m. N. E. Boston. The Eastern R. R. passes through the town. It may be considered as a part of the Boston metropolitan district. It has considerable manufactures, and is on the whole a busy place. Chelsea has two newspapers, the "Telegraph" (whig), and the "Pioneer"—both published weekly. Pop. 6,701—in 1840 it had only a pop. of 2,390.

CHELSEA, t. p. v., and cap. Orange co., Verm.: on a branch of White r., 22 m. S. by E. Montpelier. The village contains the county buildings and about 80 dwellings. Pop. 1,958.

CHEMUNG county, N. Y. Situate S. W. middle, and contains 528 sq. m. Drained chiefly by Chemung r. and its tributary streams. Surface broken, hilly, and well timbered, with large river flats. Soils very productive. Farms 2,170; manuf. 321; dwell. 5,095, and pop.—wh. 28,537, fr. col. 284—total 28,821. Capital: Elmira. Public Works: Chemung Canal; New York and Erie R. R.; Elmira and Williamsport R. R., etc.

CHEMUNG, p. v., McHenry co., Ill.: on the E. side of Piskashaw cr., 156 m. N. N. E. Springfield.

CHEMUNG, t. and p. v., Chemung co., N. Y.: on the N. side of the Chemung r., 143 m. W. S. W. Albany. The New York and Erie R. R. intersects the village 270 m. from New York and 199 from Dunkirk. Pop. 2,672.

CHEMUNG river, N. Y.: formed by the junction of Coschocton and Tioga rivers, in Stouben county, whence it flows in a S. E. direction through Chemung county and into the State of Pennsylvania, where it empties into the Susquehanna at the village of Athens. Its whole length is about 40 m., and in high flood its volume is sufficient to float down timber and produce to market. It is also used as the main feeder of the Chemung Canal.

CHENANGO county, N. Y. Situate W. centrally, and contains 792 sq. m. Drained by Chenango and Unadilla rivers and their tributary streams. Surface broken and hilly, but there are extensive and rich valleys, productive of all kinds of grain. Farms 4,406; manuf. 561; dwell. 7,572, and pop.—wh. 40,051, fr. col. 280—total 40,311. Capital: Norwich. Public Works: Chenango Canal, and Utica and Binghamton R. R. (projected).

CHENANGO, t. and p. o., Lawrence co., Penn.: on the N. E. side of Beaver r., 193 m. W. by N. Harrisburg. Pop. 1,622.

CHENANGO FORKS, p. v., Broome co., N. Y.: at the junction of the Chenango and Tioughnioga rivers, and on the line of the Chenango Canal, 103 m. W. S. W. Albany. It has considerable advantages for internal trade, etc. Pop. about 400. Pop. of Chenango t. 8,734.

CHENANGO river, N. Y.: an important tributary of the Susquehanna r., which it joins at Binghamton, in Broome County. Its course is from Madison and Oneida counties, through Chenango and Broome counties for about 75 m., and upon its banks are many flourishing villages. This river is navigable for boats and rafts 50 m. above its mouth, and is used to a considerable extent to feed the Chenango Canal, which runs nearly parallel with it through its whole course.

Iron, gold, lead, and silver, also marbles of various hues and textures are found here. Soils excellent—on the hills producing fine grasses, and near the streams the several grains. Farms 459; manuf. 5; dwell. 1,020, and pop.—wh. 6,493, fr. col. S, sl. 337—total 6,383. Capital: Murphey.

CHEROKEE county, Tex. Situate E. centrally between Neches and Angelina rivers, and contains about 740 sq. m. Drained by numerous tributaries of the border streams. Surface elevated, with a watershed running transversely N. W. and S. E. through the N. part of the county. Prairie predominates, but timber lines all the rivers. Farms 454; manuf. 8; dwell. 891, and pop.—wh. 5,389, fr. col. 1, sl. 1,233—total 6,673. Capital: Kusk.

CHEROKEE NATION, Ind. Ter. Situate between lat. 36° 0' and 37° 02' N., and extending from the Arkansas boundary to long. 100° W., or about five degrees, and containing about 16,000 sq. m. It is a fine agricultural country, producing in abundance all the necessaries of subsistence, and is well watered by the Arkansas River and its numerous and wide-spreading arms. The Cherokees number about 25,000 souls, and are, perhaps, more advanced in civilization than any others of the immigrant tribes. They have large cultivated settlements, comfortable houses, numerous herds of cattle and sheep, and many fine horses, for which their extensive prairies afford an ample subsistence. They also manufacture salt from brine springs which exist extensively in their country, and to a considerable extent manufacture their own clothing and such agricultural implements, etc., as their necessities demand. They have of late years exported much of their surplus products, bringing it down the rivers to New Orleans. The government of the Cherokees is based on a written constitution, and is republican in form. They have an elective chief or governor, a general council, elected annually, and consisting of an upper and lower house, similar to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and a judiciary, observing all the legal forms prescribed by the legislature. In fact, all the operations of the government are similar to those of other enlightened communities. They have adopted the English language to a great extent, and in their dress follow the fashions of Paris and New York. The United States supplies them with blacksmiths, wheelwrights, and wagon-makers, to teach them those useful mechanic trades; and they also receive a large annuity from the General Government on account of their lands east of the Mississippi River. Numerous missionaries are settled among them, and have been very successful in their endeavors to civilize and Christianize them; and their schools and churches are such as any enlightened nation might be proud of—more efficient, indeed, than several of the States of our Union can boast of; and their public press is not inferior to that of Arkansas either in talent or respectability.

CHESAPEAKE CITY, p. v., Cecil co., Md.: at the confluence of Broad cr. and Baek cr. of Elk r., 51 m. N. E. Annapolis. The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal has its W. terminus at this point.

CHESAPEAKE bay, Md. and Virg.: is the largest arm of the sea within the limits of the Union. Its entrance is between Cape Charles and Cape Henry, in Virginia, 12 m. apart, and it extends inland 270 m., dividing Maryland into two unequal parts (and the lower part of the peninsula from the main body of Virginia). It is from 7 to 20 m. broad, and generally as much as 9 fathoms deep. This great bay affords many commodious harbors, and a safe and easy navigation. Numerous fine rivers empty into it—the Susquehanna, at its northern termination, and the Potomac and James on its W. side; and besides these, it receives the waters of the Rappahannock, the Patuxent, the Patapsco, the Chester, the Elk, the Choptank, the Nanticoke, and numerous others. The area drained by these, its tributaries, has been estimated at 72,000 sq. m. Baltimore is the chief commercial city within its circuit, but there are many others of minor importance which depend upon its waters for an outlet to the ocean. The fisheries of the Chesapeake are of immense value to the inhabitants of its shores.

CHICAGO, post city, port of entry, and cap. Cook co., Ill.: at the mouth of Chicago r., on Lake Michigan, 183 m. N. N. E. Springfield. Lat. 42° 52' 20" N., and long. 87° 25' W. The main body of the r. sets back about 2 m. into the city, then divides into two branches, both of which have a pretty uniform depth of 12 to 15 feet, all making a commodious and almost unlimited harbor for an immense amount of shipping which continually comes to, and goes from, this point. The city borders on a wide, rich, and beautiful prairie, extending in different directions for many miles, and which is handsomely diversified by groves and strips of timber springing up at intervals along the banks on the lake shore, furnishing a diversified picture, which is greatly enhanced by gardens and villas, which, mixing with the scene, make it one of enchanting loveliness. Though the site is very low and level, scarcely five feet above the lake, there are no marshes or wet lands about the place, and the lake winds, by constantly agitating the waters, much like the tidal perturbations of sea-board rivers, have a good effect in promoting cleanliness and health to so large a city.

Chicago is one of the most substantial cities of the Great West. It extends along the lake shore for about a mile, and inland beyond the bifurcations of the river. The bar at the entrance has been much reduced, and piers have been extended into the lake to prevent accumulations of sand and drift. The depth is now sufficient, indeed, for the admission of the largest lake craft and steamers. Milwaukee is the only city of the West that has progressed at a more rapid rate within the past ten years. In 1830 Chicago was a mere trading post, and in 1840 it had only 4,470 inhabitants. In 1850 its population amounted to 29,963, being an increase of 25,493 within the decade, or at the rate of 576.31 per centum. The increase of Milwaukee, within the same period, was at the rate of 1,071.75 per centum; of St. Louis, of 372.76; and of Cincinnati, of 149.11 per centum. Such facts are sufficient to show its present importance and its future prospects, which are attributable no less to the energy of the citizens of the place in prosecuting great public works, than to its position in relation to the route of travel, east and west. Fronting on the lake, it has direct shipping connection with all the ports of the States of the Union, north and west, and with Canada; and by means of the extensive lines of internal improvement, its commerce reaches from the Atlantic sea-board to the banks of the Mississippi. On all these great lines of travel and trade its commerce is brisk and ever increasing.

The internal improvements directly connecting Chicago with the great marts of commerce are, the Illinois and Michigan Canal, 100 miles long, which extends from the lake to the Illinois River at La Salle, and opens to the port the wide river country of the South and West, forming an outlet for the rich products of Kentucky, Missouri, Iowa, and Illinois, by the lakes; two lines of railroad round the bend of Lake Michigan, thence continuous to the sea-board at Boston and New York, and also connecting with the Indiana and Ohio railroads; lines to the Mississippi River at Galena, Rock Island, and Quincy, Alton, and Cairo; a line along the shore to Milwaukee; and lines extending to Janesville, Madison, Fond du Lac, etc. Chicago also reaches to the back country by means of numerous plank roads, which accommodate the producers of the neighborhood. Most of the lines of railroad have sufficiently progressed to insure their early completion; and to judge by the working of those portions now opened for traffic, the success of each enterprise will far exceed the anticipations of the most enthusiastic of their projectors. Chicago has felt their advantages; the internal trade of the State has quintupled itself within a few years, and capital and population have sought a market so replete with facilities of trade and commerce as those centering at Chicago. In 1839, the total value of property in Chicago was assessed at $236,542; in 1850 it was assessed at $3,562,717, of which $6,804,262 was real estate! At the latter period the commerce of the port was conducted through the agency of eight bankers and dealers in exchange, 109 wholesale, forwarding, commission, and produce houses, and 54 lumber dealers. During the year 1851, the arrivals at Chicago were as follows: steamers, 662; propellers, 153; schooners, 1,182; brigs, 230; barges, 13. Total, 2,279 vessels, the aggregate burden of which was 955,600 tons. The following tables will exhibit the quantity of some of the leading exports and imports, by lake canal and railroad for the same year.

The above only represents a portion of the domestic commerce of Chicago, and even does not estimate that carried on by teams, which is commensurably large. The value of articles imported from Canada during the year, was $5,511, and of exports from Chicago to Canada, $116,185. The arrivals from Canada were 7, and the clearances for the same destination, 13. The value of the whole domestic commerce for a series of years, has been as follows:

Chicago has five daily newspapers: the "C. Tribune" (indep't.), the "C. Democrat" (dem.), the "C. Journal" (whig), the "Commercial Advertiser" (whig), and the "Argus," all of which also issue weekly editions; six weekly newspapers, the "New Covenant," and the "Western Citizen" (both Universalist), the "Gem of the Prairie" (lib.), the "Prairie Herald" (Presbyterian), the "Watchman of the Prairie" (Baptist), and the "Commercial Reporter;" one tri-weekly, the "Illinois State Gazette;" one semi-monthly, the "North-western Medical Journal;" and three monthly periodicals, the "Eclectic Review" (educat.), the "Prairie Farmer" (agric.), and the "North-western Journal of Homoeopathy."

Latrobe, an intelligent traveler, who visited Chicago in 1833, thus describes it: "This little mushroom town is situated on the verge of a level tract of country, for the greater part consisting of open prairie lands, at a point where a small river, whose sources interlock—in the wet season—with those of the Illinois River, enters Lake Michigan. It, however, forms no harbor; and vessels must anchor in the open lake, which spreads to the horizon, on the north and east, in a sheet of uniform extent." The contrast between Chicago of 1833 and Chicago of the present day, is truly startling; and the writer of twenty years ago, had he been told that his "mushroom town" was so soon to become the focus of a commerce equal to that enjoyed by many of the States of Europe, would he have credited so unprecedented a fact, or would he not have considered the prognostication the emanation of a crazy brain?

CHILLICOTHE, p. city, and cap. Ross co., Ohio: on the W. side of the Scioto r., 37 m. S. Columbus. In plan, this city somewhat resembles Philadelphia, being bounded N. by Scioto r. and S. by Paint cr., here about three-fourths of a mile apart. The principal streets follow the course of the Scioto, and these are crossed rectilinearly by others extending from river to creek—the two main streets crossing each other in the middle of the city, and being each 99 feet wide. Water Street, which faces on the river, is 82½ feet wide, and the others 66 feet. The streets are lighted with gas. The city has numerous fine and substantial buildings, among which are the Court House, the markets, banking houses, hotels, and numerous churches and school-houses. The city occupies the site of an ancient mound, but this has been leveled to make way for improvements. On the W. side of the city is a hill rising abruptly to the height of 800 feet, from which there is an extensive and beautiful view of the city and vicinity. Through the city the Ohio Canal passes, and before long it will become connected in every direction by railroads now in course of construction. The city has two daily papers, the "Scioto Gazette" (whig), and the "Ancient Metropolis" (indep.), both of which also publish a weekly edition; and two weekly papers, the "C. Advertiser" (dem.), and the "Ohio Correspondent" (indep.) As a place of manufactures and commerce, the city has a high rank among the inland towns, and is rapidly progressing in material prosperity. Chillicothe was formerly the State capital. Pop. in 1840, 3,977; in 1850, 7,093.

CHIPPewa bay, N. Y.: on the E. side of St. Lawrence r., opposite St. Lawrence co. It contains a number of the "Thousand Islands."

CHIPPewa river, Mich.: a branch of Pine r., which it joins near its mouth.

CHIPPewa river, Wis.: this river (the Ojibwa of the Indians) runs entirely across the State, having its rise on the borders of Michigan, near the sources of the Wisconsin, Montreal, etc., and running into the Mississippi r. near the foot of Lake Pepin. It is about 500 yards wide at its mouth. There are 14 rapids on the Chippewa—the principal one, called the "Falls," is about 75 m. from its mouth, and has a descent of 24 feet in the distance of half a mile. A very large amount of pine lumber is annually sent down this river. Toward the sources of the stream and its branches there are many fine lakes, some of which have received names, and the principal are known as Lac Courtoiselle, Lac Chetae, Lac du Flambeau, Tomahawk Lake, Red Cedar Lake, Rice Lake, etc. The Red Cedar Fork is the main branch of the Chippewa, entering it from the W., about 36 m. above its mouth. About 60 m. below Rice Lake, on this river, according to Schoolcraft, commences a series of rapids over horizontal layers of sandstone rock, which extend, with short intervals, down the river 24 m. The remainder of the distance (about 50 m.) to the junction is characterized by deep water, with a strong current; and at the junction is commanding and elevated, affording a fine view of a noble expanse of waters.

CHOCTAW NATION, Ind. Ter.: is bounded N. by the Canada and Arkansas rivers, E. by the State of Arkansas, S. by Red River, and W. by the 100th meridian. The country in the E. is mountainous, with large and fertile valleys—in the W. it is undulating and varied. The whole is well drained by numerous tributaries of the Arkansas and Red rivers, both of which are navigable for steamboats. The Choctaws are extensively engaged in agriculture, and have good houses and well-fenced fields, on which they raise corn and cotton in abundance, and they have good stocks of cattle, horses, and sheep. On the streams they have numerous saw and grist mills, and in several parts cotton gins; spinning and weaving are carried on in their principal settlements; and all their own blacksmithing, wagon-building, etc., are done by themselves under direction of mechanics furnished them by the United States' Government. The Choctaws are governed by a written constitution and laws; the nation is divided into four districts, each of which elects its own chief quarterly. The General Council, consisting of 40 members, and chosen by the voters of each district, meets annually at the Council House, on the first Monday of October. This body frames all laws, but the chiefs have a veto, which the council can only overrule by a two-thirds vote. Their legislative business is transacted according to the usual forms of civilized societies, and the councilors are paid, during their sittings, $2 from the national treasury. For judicial purposes, the nation is divided into districts, and trial by jury, and appeal to the higher courts are allowed. The military department is intrusted to a general elected by the people at large, and there are 32 captains in each district. The Council House, which is a large and commodious building, is located on the W. side of Kiameshi r., nearly equi-distant between the N. and S. lines of the national territory. The CHICKASAWS, who were their kinsmen on the E. side of the Mississippi, dwell with the Choctaws on the W. side, forming the fourth district of the nation. They are governed by the same laws, and have a proportional representation in the General Council. The two nations, however, receive their annuities from the United States separately, and are distinct in some other respects. Numerous missionaries are settled among both the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and have succeeded well in their efforts to civilize them; so that these nations may now be considered as among the most intelligent of the Indian tribes.

CHOPPEES, p. v., Wells co., Ind.: 84 m. N. E. by N. Indianapolis.

CHOPTANK river, Md.: a large stream of the Eastern Shore, which rises in two main branches—one from Delaware, and flowing in a course generally S., empties through a large estuary into Chesapeake Bay, between Tighman's Island on the N. and Sharp's Island on the S. It is navigable for sloops for nearly 40 m. from its confluence with the bay.

CHOWAN county, N. Car. Situate on Albemarle Sound, between Chowan and Perquimons rivers, and contains 218 sq. m. Surface low and level, with swamps; soils sandy, but moderately fertile, producing corn and cotton. Farms 344; manuf. 23; dwell. 613, and pop.—wh. 2,944, fr. col. 104, sl. 3,673.—total 6,721. Capital: Edenton.

CHOWAN river, N. Car.: is formed by the union of the Nottaway, Meherrin, and Blackwater rivers, which rise and have their courses principally in Virginia. It flows into Albemarle Sound, a little N. of the mouth of the Roanoke. It is navigable on the Meherrin branch for large vessels to Murfreesboro, near the Virginia State line.

CHRISTIAN county, Ill. Situate centrally, and contains 560 sq. m. Drained by the South Fork and other tributaries of Sangamon r., which bounds it N. Surface chiefly undulating prairie, with frequent timber groves; and soil everywhere fertile. Farms 484; manuf. 12; dwell. 555, and pop.—wh. 3,202, fr. col. 0—total 3,202. Capital: Taylorsville. Public Works: Illinois Central R. R.

CHRISTIAN county, Ky. Situate W. on S. border, and contains 540 sq. m. Drained by Little r. and W. fork of Red r., tributaries of the Cumberland. Surface generally level, and the soils various—in the N. indifferent, but well timbered, and in the S. fertile, producing wheat, corn, and tobacco. Iron and bituminous coal abundant. Farms

1,190; manuf. 77; dwell. 1,965, and pop.—wh. 11,309, fr. col. 131, sl. 8,140—total 19,580. Capital: Hopkinsville. Public Works: A railroad from Nashville, Tenn., to Henderson, on the Ohio (projected.)

CHRISTIANA, p. v., New Castle co., Del.: on Christiana cr., 83 m. N. Dover. The Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore R. R. passes through the village. Its manufactures are comparatively large, and consist chiefly of flour, gunpowder, etc. The hund. of the same name contains 22,560 acres, and 3,902 inhabitants.

CHRISTIANA, t. and p. o., Dane co., Wisc.: on the E. side of Rock cr., 20 m. E. S. E. Madison. Pop. 1,054.

CHRISTIANA river, Mich. and Ind.: a tributary of the St. Joseph r.; it rises in the E. part of Cass co., and flowing S. W. and S. passes into Indiana, where it joins the St. Joseph's at Elkhart village. It is a never-failing mill stream, and furnishes abundance of hydraulic power.

CHRISTIANSBURGH, p. v., Shelby co., Ky.

CINCINNATI, post city, port of entry, and cap. Hamilton co., Ohio: on the N. side of the Ohio r., directly opposite the mouth of Licking r., and distant by river course from Pittsburg 465 m., from Louisville 182 m., from the mouth of Ohio r. 494 m., and from New Orleans 1,447 m., and in direct line 113 m. S. W. Columbus. Lat. 39° 05' 54" N., and long. 84° 27' W. from Greenwich, or 7° 25' W. from Washington. It is the largest inland city of the United States, and in point of population is only exceeded by Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New Orleans. In 1800 it had about 750 inhabitants; in 1810, 2,540; in 1820, 9,642; in 1830, 24,581; in 1840, 46,388; and in 1850, 115,436.

The city is located in a beautiful valley of about 12 m. in circumference, surrounded by hills. This valley is divided almost centrally by the Ohio r. It was first settled on the 24th Dec., 1788, by a party of men sent out under Mathias Denman and Robert Paterson, to improve a portion of the purchase made by the Hon. John Cleves Symmes. This purchase embraced a tract of 811,682 acres, lying between the Great and Little Miami rivers, and extending along the Ohio r. a distance of 87 m. One square mile in each township was reserved for school purposes, and section 29 in each for the support of religious societies.

This party landed opposite the mouth of Licking r., and laid out a village called Losantville, a name shortly afterward abandoned for that of Cincinnati. In Feb., 1789, another party, under Symmes himself, landed at North Bend, and there laid out what was intended to be a large city, to which they gave the name of Symmes. Soldiers were now sent out to protect the settlers at the Bend; but Fort Washington having been established, they were removed to Cincinnati subsequently, and the rivalry of the two places succumbed in favor of Cincinnati as the chief seat of business. The fort stood on what is now Arch-street, between Third and Fourth-streets, and east of Broadway. In 1790 General Harrison marched hence against the Indians, and in the next year General St. Clair started for the same place on his ill-fated expedition. The fort was successively commanded by Ziegler, Williamson, and Harrison, the latter of whom became subsequently President of the United States. In 1792 the first church was erected on what is now corner of Maine and Fourth-streets, and occupied by the First Presbyterian Church. In the rear of it are many graves of the pioneers. In 1793, the first paper, called the "Sentinel of the North-west Territory," north of the Ohio r., was established at Cincinnati by William Maxwell. On the 11th Jan., 1794, a line of two keel boats, with bullet-proof covers and port-holes, and provided with cannon and small arms, was established between Cincinnati and Pittsburg, each making a trip once in four weeks. During this period, the town progressed but slowly, while idleness, drinking, and gambling prevailed in the army, and was to a great extent participated in by the citizens. The population at various periods is shown above. From 1800 to 1810 it progressed pretty rapidly, and considerable trade was carried on with New Orleans in keel boats, which returned laden with foreign goods. The passage to New Orleans then occupied about 25 days, and the return 65 days. In 1819 the city was incorporated, since which period its progress in population and material wealth has been uninterrupted and rapid in an astonishing degree, considering the difficulties it had to contend with before the establishment of steam navigation on the rivers and railroads throughout the country. It would be invidious to compare the early career of Cincinnati with that of Chicago, Milwaukee, and some others; they were founded under quite different auspices; the one in the midst of a country, bare of population, without a road, and scant of river facilities, and the others with every facility of travel perfected, and a tide of immigration unceasingly pouring upon them.

Cincinnati occupies the whole of the first bank of the river, called the Bottom, and the second, called the Hill, which is 108 feet above low water mark, and 60 feet above the first bank. The streets are so graded as to render the communication between the two parts easy, and many of them are adorned with fine edifices, and beautiful shade trees. It extends back to a third range of hills, a distance on Main-street of about two miles, and in the western part perhaps more, and along the Ohio about three miles. Excepting on the margin of the river, the city is regularly laid out in streets and alleys, crossing each other at right angles. The streets running E. and W., proceeding from the river, are denominated First, Second, etc., while those running N. and S. are named after the indigenous forest trees, as Walnut, Sycamore, etc. Main-street extends from the steamboat landing, on the river, directly north to the northern bounds of the city. The streets are generally paved, and the foot-paths flagged. The city contains about 16,000 houses, 80 churches, many of them very fine edifices; 3 colleges, 4 medical schools, a law school, a female college, several female seminaries, 6 classical schools, a large number of finely-built public schools, 4 banks, with resources amounting to $3,963,871; and 17 insurance companies, etc.; several public halls, the county and city courts, a mercantile exchange, and numerous libraries, and literary, philosophical and charitable institutions, an observatory, 4 theatres, a museum, gas-works, water-works, etc. In fact, it has all the appliances necessary for the physical, intellectual, and moral enjoyment of a large population; and in its manufactures, commerce, and general wealth, is pre-eminent among the cities of the world.

The manufactures of Cincinnati embrace almost every department of industrial employment. It would be impossible to enumerate them in the compass allowed to this article; but there are some industries that so distinguish the city, that their enumeration is necessary. It has 6 distilleries; 140 bakeries; 12 bell and brass foundries; 82 blacksmith shops; 10 boiler yards; 15 book-binders; 374 boot and shoe factories; 31 breweries; 60 brick yards; 208 mason shops; 121 butchers' shops; 254 carpenter and builder shops; 24 carriage factories; 63 coopers' shops; 42 copper-plate printing establishments; 13 beef and tongue curing establishments; 4 cutleries; 32 daguerreotype establishments; 16 domestic liquor manufactories; 15 dye houses; 19 edge tool factories; 14 engraving establishments; 14 feed and flour mills; 44 founderies and engine shops; 136 furniture factories; 10 gilding establishments; 2 glass works; 6 gunsmith shops; 40 hat factories; 14 ice-packing establishments; 5 iron rolling-mills; 3 iron safe factories; 5 iron railing factories; 10 lever lock factories; 4 lithographic establishments; 7 looking-glass factories; 12 machinist shops; 5 marble works; 6 mathematical and optical instrument factories; 10 upholsteries; 60 millineries; 7 morocco leather factories; 6 musical instrument factories; 1 castor oil factory; 34 oil, lard, and stearine factories; 3 linseed oil mills; 72 paint and glazing shops; 9 paper mills; 14 patent medicine factories; 7 plane factories; 1 planing machine factory; 6 platform scale factories; 6 plow factories; 16 plumbing shops; 14 potteries; 33 pork, beef, and ham-curing factories (employing 2,450 hands, and producing annually $5,760,000); 12 publishing houses; 40 saddleries; 25 sash, blind, etc., factories; 22 sausage factories; 15 saw mills; 2 saw factories; 5 sheeting, etc., factories; 15 shirt and stock factories; 33 soap and candle factories; 7 steamboat building yards; 3 stereotype foundries; 22 stone-cutting yards; 36 stone mason yards; 98 tailor establishments; 30 tanneries; 62 tobacco, cigar, and snuff factories; 30 turners' shops; 2 type foundries; 26 vinegar factories; 42 wagon factories; 40 wine manufactories; 5 wire-working establishments; 33 whiskey distilleries, etc. There are 150 several industries pursued, and the total number of all manufacturing and industrial establishments in the city was about 3,400. The total number of hands employed, about 32,550, and the annual value of products, $43,500,000.

There are few cities of the Union so well furnished with facilities of locomotion. It has one of the finest rivers in the world fronting it, and railroads and canals stretching in every direction for thousands of miles. These form its great avenues of commerce. The Miami Canal, and the Ohio division of the Wabash and Erie Canal, connect the Ohio r. and Lake Erie, a distance of 251 m. The principal completed railroads are, the Little Miami R. R. and its connections to Cleveland, 255 m.; the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton, and its connections to Sandusky, 218 m.; the Cincinnati and Hillsboro' R. R. to Parkersburg, 179 m. (now open to Hillsboro' 60 m.); and a number of others completed, in progress, and projected, passing to every part of the State, and into all the neighboring States, and connecting Cincinnati with all the principal cities of the lakes, the sea-board, and the West and South. Cincinnati, in fact, is the chief centre of the railroad system of the West. It has direct railroad connection with every lake-transport from Chicago to Niagara; with Albany, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and will soon have communication with Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, and St. Louis. Railroads are being constructed in all these directions, and when completed will build up Cincinnati, and make it a competitor for the wealth of commerce second to no other city of the world. It has already had the foretaste of its future, and is now stretching out its arms to gather in the vast, illimitable wealth with which nature has surrounded it. It has also telegraphs, giving it instantaneous communication with every large city from Maine to Florida, and from the Atlantic to beyond the Mississippi.

The river trade is commensurate with the vast internal trade centering at this point, and with the manufacturing industry of the city. It is carried on chiefly in steamboats plying hence to Pittsburg and New Orleans, and the places intermediate. Its steamers also penetrate all the great rivers of the West—the tributaries of the great father of waters. The arrival of steamboats, in the year ending 31st Aug., 1850, numbered 3,693; of these 288 were from New Orleans, 658 from Pittsburg, 214 from St. Louis, and 2,593 from other ports; and the departures amounted to 3,298, of which 249 were for New Orleans, 547 for Pittsburg, 222 for St. Louis, and 2,274 for other ports. For the detailed statistics of the commerce of the port, for the year above named, the reader is referred to Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, for Oct., 1851. The shipping owned within the district of Cincinnati, in 1850, was 17,181 tons, of which 16,906 were navigated by steam-power.

The city is governed by a mayor, recorder, and 3 councilors for each of the wards into which it is divided. It has a separate judiciary, and also a commercial court, specially instituted to try causes arising between merchants. The amount of taxes collected for city purposes, for the year ending 20th March, 1851, was $438,345, viz.: for general purposes, $130,172; for interest on debt, $66,888; for House of Refuge, $60,079; for Poor-house, $51,268; for support of watch, $40,053; for support of common schools, $37,220; and colored schools, $2,664. The debt of the city at the same period, was $1,840,000, and the value of its property amounted to $2,230,543.

The newspaper and periodical press of Cincinnati consists of 8 daily papers, all of which issue weekly editions, and one a tri-weekly edition; of 22 weekly papers; of 1 semi-monthly, and 14 monthly periodicals. The daily papers are the "C. Gazette" (whig), the "C. Commercial" (indep't.), the "C. Enquirer" (dem.), the "Chronicle and Atlas" (whig), the "C. Times" (indep't.), the "Dispatch and Democrat" (dem.), the "Democratic Journal" (dem.), and the "Nonpareil." These circulate a weekly average of 2,000 to 22,000 copies each. The weekly papers are, "Cist's Weekly Advertiser" (commercial), the "Pictorial Advertiser," the "Columbian" (lit.), the "Price Current" (commercial), the "Western Police Gazette," "Life in Cincinnati," the "Screw-Driver," the "Warning Bell" (freeman's), the "Proclamation Reformer," the "Phonetic Advocate," the "Star of the West," the "Presbyterian of the West," the "Journal and Messenger" (relig.), the "Youth's Friend," the "Catholic Telegraph," the "Christian Age," the "Western Christian Advocate," the "Christian Apologist," the "Western Fountain" (temperance), the "Central Christian Herald," the "Währeet's Freund" (Germ.), the "Der Deutsche Republikaner" (Germ.), the "Democratiches Wochenblatt" (Germ.), and the "Volksblatt" (Germ.) The "Sunday School Advocate" is published semi-monthly. The monthly periodicals are, the "Ladies' Repository," the "Templar's Magazine," the "Counterfeit Detector," the "Masonic Review," the "Western Lancer" (med.), the "Dental Register," the "Law Journal," the "Crisis" (liberty?), the "Congress Hall," the "School Friend" (education), the "Eclectic Medical Journal," the "Golden Rule," the "United Presbyterian," and a "Goodman's Counterfeit Detector." Thus it would appear that politics, religion, science, literature, etc., have their special advocates, and that all the great interests of the people has a special organ to herald their peculiarities to the world. Many of the above are conducted with great energy and talent, and have a circulation beyond their own locality.

At a short distance from the city, on the hills, in its back ground, are two beautiful villages, Mount Auburn and Walnut Hills, which are mostly occupied as country seats by persons doing business in Cincinnati. Walnut Hills is the seat of Lane Seminary, a theological institution under the New School Presbyterians. Four miles N. W. of the city, are two fine cemeteries—"Spring Grove Cemetery," containing about 100 acres; and the "Wesleyan Cemetery," containing about 40 acres. Both are beautifully located, and have been greatly improved. For miles about Cincinnati the cultivation of the grape, for which the soil and climate are well adapted, is carried on extensively, and the vineyards form, perhaps, the most delightful portions of the scenery. The wine here produced is said to be equal to the wines of France, in flavor and body, and are now manufactured for commerce.

CIRCLEVILLE, t., p. v., and cap. Pickaway co., Ohio: on the E. branch of the Scioto r., 26 m. S. by E. Columbus. The village occupies the site of ancient fortifications, and has a fine fertile neighborhood. Its streets are laid out at right angles, and it has several circular and triangular areas devoted to public uses. The principal buildings are a handsome court-house, of brick, and in form octagonal, the market-house, the public offices, several handsome church edifices and school-houses, and the buildings belonging to the Ohio Canal, which passes through the village, and at this point crosses the river by a fine aqueduct. The railroad from Cincinnati to Wheeling also intersects it. Four periodicals are published here—the "C. Herald" (whig), the "C. Watchman" (dem.), the "Religious Telescope," and "Busy Martha" (religious.) In the village a considerable manufacturing business is engaged in, and the town has several furnaces, tanneries, etc. As a commercial depot it occupies a place second to none of the interior towns, and its progress is onward. Pop. of v. 3,411.—of t. 3,842.

CITY POINT, p. v. and port, Prince George co., Virg.: on the S. side of James r., on a point formed by the confluence of Appomattox r., 19 m. S. E. Richmond. James r. is navigable for large ships to this point, which is the port of Petersburg, with which city it is connected by a railroad 10 m. long. Several lines of steam packets sail between this and New York, touching at Norfolk, etc.

CLACKAMAS county, Oreg. Situate centrally, and contains 141,000 sq. m., but this area comprises a large unoccupied territory eastward. The county proper is of much less extent, and lies S. of Columbia r., and E. of Willamette r. It is drained by Sandy r. of the Columbia, and the Clackamas and other tributaries of the Willamette r. The surface is generally level, and the soils of extraordinary fertility, covered with dense forests. Coal and iron exist in abundance, and building material is plentiful. Farms 150; manuf. 18; dwell. 368, and pop.—wh. 1,836, fr. col. 23—total 1,859. Capital: Oregon City.

CLAIBORNE parish, La. Situate N. W., and contains 1,050 sq. m. Drained E. by the forks of Bayou D'Arbone, W. and S. W. by creeks of the Bayou Dorcheat and Black Lake cr. Surface varied, but generally level or rolling. Most of the parish consists of light pine land, but on the streams there are hard woods, and the soils are of good quality, suitable for cotton. Farms 554; manuf. 3; dwell. 842, and pop.—wh. 4,949, fr. col. 0, sl. 2,522—total 7,471. Capital: Homer.

CLAIBORNE county, Miss. Situate S. W., on Mississippi r., and contains 450 sq. m. Black r. washes its N. line, and it is drained chiefly by Bayou Pierre, and branches. Surface varied and uneven, and back from the streams the soils are light and sterile. Cotton and Indian corn are the chief products. Farms 310; manuf. 19; dwell. 659, and pop.—wh. 3,449, fr. col. 42, sl. 11,450—total 14,941. Capital: Port Gibson. Public Works: Grand Gulf R. R.

CLAIBORNE county, Tenn. Situate between Clinch r. and the N. line of the State, and contains 550 sq. m. Drained by Powell's r. and numerous creeks of Clinch r. Mountain prevails in the N. and N. W., but the surface in other parts is pleasantly varied, and has extensive valleys. Iron is abundant. The principal agricultural products are corn, wheat, and oats, also pork. Farms 944; manuf. 24; dwell.

1,425, and pop.—wh. 8,609, fr. col. 100, sl. 660—total 9,369. Capital: Tazewell.

R. also passes through the town, 46 m. from North Bennington. Agriculture is the chief employment of the inhabitants. Pop. 147.

CLARENDON SPRINGS, p. v., Rutland co., Verm.: 55 m. S. by W. Montpelier. Here is a chalybeate spring, containing also carbonate of lime, which is resorted to by invalids for its medicinal properties.

CLARION, t. and p. v., Geauga co., Ohio: on Cuyahoga r., 146 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 1,006.

CLARION county, Penn. Situate N. W. centrally, and contains 650 sq. m. Drained by Clarion and Toby's rivers and creeks of Alleghany r. and Red Bank r., the former of which washes its S. W. and the latter its S. borders. The N. part of the co. is rough and uneven; in the S. the surface is moderately undulating and fertile, with abundance of timber. It contains large deposits of iron ore, which are extensively worked. Farms 1,726; manuf. 246; dwell. 4,008, and pop.—wh. 23,448, fr. col. 117—total 23,565. Capital: Clarion.

CLARION, t., p. v., and cap. Clarion co., Penn.: on the S. E. side of Clarion r., 152 m. W. N. W. Harrisburg. The village is situate on the Susquehanna and Waterford turnpike, 1 m. E. of the river. Its site, previous to 1840, was covered with pine woods; it is now one of the most important places of the interior, and has a population of about 1,200 inhabitants. Two newspapers are published in the town, the "C. Register" (whig), and the "C. Democrat"—both weekly.

CLARION, p. v., Grundy co., Ill.: 126 m. N. N. E. Springfield.

CLARION river (or Great Toby's cr.), Penn.: an affluent of Alleghany r., from the N. E., and about 70 m. long. It is navigable for boats for 50 or 60 m., but is principally used to float down timber to Pittsburg, etc.

CLARK, p. o., Mercer co., Penn.: 204 m. W. N. W. Harrisburg.

CLARKE county, Ala. Situate S. W., between the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers, and contains 1,332 sq. m. The interior is drained by a large number of creeks falling into the border rivers. CLEVELAND, p. city, port of entry, and cap. Cuyahoga co., Ohio: on Cuyahoga r., where it discharges into Lake Erie, 126 m. N. N. E. Columbus. Lat. $41^{\circ} 31' 07''$ N., and long. $81^{\circ} 45' 57''$ W. Cleveland is the commercial emporium of northern Ohio, and second only to Cincinnati in population and general progress. It possesses great facilities for the transit of goods and passengers: the Ohio Canal, extending to the Ohio r. at Portsmouth, 309 m., has its northern terminus here, and another canal, branching off from it at Akron, connects it with Pittsburg. It is connected with all the ports of Lake Erie by the lake shore chain of railroads extending from Niagara Falls to Milwaukee; with Pittsburg, by the Ohio and Pennsylvania R. R., and the Cleveland and Pittsburg R. R.; and with Cincinnati by the Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R.: these, uniting with the various railroads running to the sea-board at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, etc., to the southward into Kentucky, Tennessee, etc., to Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, and New Orleans, and to the westward to and beyond the Mississippi r., give it access to every part of the settled portion of the Union, and serve as conduits of the vast commerce which centres at this point. And besides these great avenues, it has numerous plank and macadamized roads leading from it in all directions; and its telegraphic connections extend to every important city from the British Provinces to New Orleans, and from the Atlantic to the utmost western bounds of civilization. Regular lines of steamboats ply to Dunkirk, to Buffalo, to Detroit, to Toledo, and Sandusky, and to the upper lake country.

Cleveland is one of those great cities of the West that have risen up as if by magic within the past twenty years. In 1830 the place contained less than 1,000 inhabitants; in 1840 it had 6,071, and in 1850 its population amounted to 17,034. It derives its name from General Moses Cleveland, an agent of the Connecticut Land Company, who accompanied the first surveying party upon the Connecticut Western Reserve. The place on which the city now stands was surveyed under his direction in 1796. In 1799 there was but one family residing here, and even in 1825 there were under 500 persons within its limits. In 1814 Cleveland was incorporated as a village, and in 1836 it received a city charter.

The city, except a small portion of it immediately on the river, is built on a gravelly plain, 80 feet above Lake Erie, of which it has a commanding prospect. The location is dry and healthy, and the view of the meanderings of the Cuyahoga r., and of the steamboat and lake craft ever entering or leaving the harbor, or on the waters of the lake to the horizon, presents a fine picture of commercial activity. The country around is replete with rich scenery, and for miles around is under a high state of cultivation.

The plan of the city is rectangular, the streets being usually 80 feet wide, except Main-street, running through the middle of the city which is 120 feet wide. Near the centre there is a public square of 10 acres, divided into four equal parts by intersecting streets, neatly inclosed and adorned with shade trees. The Court House fronts on this square. The city contains numerous well-built churches of all denominations, public institutions, schools, etc. Many of the private dwellings are expensive and tasteful. The harbor is one of the best on the lake; it is formed by the mouth of the Cuyahoga, and improved by a pier on each side, extending 425 yards into the lake, 200 feet apart, and faced with substantial masonry. The natural advantages of the harbor are unsurpassed in the West. There is a light-house on the high bank of the lake, and another at the entrance to the harbor. The coast-wise commerce of Cleveland, in the year 1850, amounted in value to $13,886,531, of which $7,080,957 represented the imports, and $6,855,556 that of the exports. The shipping owned in the district was 35,315 tons, of which 9,994 tons were navigated by steam-power. The shipping built within the year was 686 tons. Cleveland has also considerable commerce with Canada. The great bulk of its commercial material, however, is now conveyed on the railroads and canals, to and from the sea-board, etc., but the exact amount can not be ascertained.

Manufacturing, though in its infancy, is carried on to some extent. Most of the engines, and other equipments for the steamboats and railroads of the neighborhood, are manufactured at the Cuyahoga Steam Furnace; and there are also two large flouring mills here, one worked by steam, and the other by the surplus water of the Ohio Canal. Of the ordinary mechanical trades there is a fair representation, and among them are several extensive establishments.

The public schools of the city are numerous, and are under efficient management. The buildings are generally of brick; that on St. Clair-street is an ornament to the city. The course of instruction is graduated, and when the scholars are sufficiently advanced, they are promoted to the high school, in which they are instructed in several branches of natural science. There are also many highly efficient private schools and seminaries; and the city has several literary associations and reading rooms. At the Lyceum lectures are delivered during the winter evenings. There are three musical halls in the city. The public press of the city consists of three daily newspapers (which issue, also, weekly editions), and two weekly newspapers. The dailies are, the "C. Herald" (whig), the "C. Plaindealer" (dem.), and the "True Democrat" (free soil); and the weeklies are, the "C. Advertiser" (neutral), and the "C. Germania" (Germ. dem.)

Ohio City, on the opposite side of the Cuyahoga r., is virtually a part of Cleveland; but it has a separate incorporation. It is in the same position as New York City and Brooklyn, distinct corporations, with interests alike. The municipal authorities of Cleveland consist of a mayor, and one alderman and three councilmen for each ward. The police arrangements of the city are excellent, and the cleanliness and order of the place are remarkable.

COHASSET, t. and p. v., Norfolk co., Mass.: facing N. E. on Massachusetts Bay, 16 m. S. E. Boston. The coast is here rocky and dangerous; it has a considerable amount of shipping, chiefly engaged in coasting and in the fisheries, and the v. is important as the E. terminus of the South Shore R., 11 m. from Braintree. It has a fine summer climate, and the shore is a favorite resort for invalids and fashionables. Pop. 1,775.

COHOES, p. v., Albany co., N. Y.: on the S. W. side of Mohawk r., 8 m. N. Albany, a little below the Falls, and near the junction of the Champlain and Erie Canals. The water-power of the place is very extensive, and is used for various manufacturing purposes. It contains 7 churches, about 300 houses, and 2,600 inhabitants. A railroad is now in course of construction from Albany to this point to accommodate the manufacturing interest. The "Cohoos Cataract" (neutral) is published weekly. The name of this v. has lately been changed to that of Rockton.

COHOES falls, N. Y.: immediately above Cohoes village, 2 m. from the mouth of Mohawk r. The surrounding scenery is romantic, and when the r. is full the falls present a grand appearance. Besides a rapid above and below the falls, the r., here from 300 to 400 feet broad, has a perpendicular fall of 70 feet. Half a mile below the falls is a bridge across the r. 800 feet long, from which the view of the cataract is seen to advantage. This fall is always an object of interest to travelers, and, if inferior to the grandeur of Niagara, has much to attract and please in its varied scenery.

COHUTAH SPRING, p. o., Murray co., Ga.: at the base of Coluhatt Mountain, in the N. E. corner of the co., 164 m. N. N. W. Milledgeville. The spring is on the S. side of a small stream issuing from the mountain, which joins the Connesauga cr., 6 m. below. This is one of the most valuable mineral springs in this section of the country.

COLCHESTER, t. and p. v., New London co., Conn.: 21 m. S. S. E. Hartford. Surface uneven; soils of average fertility. Drained by Salmon r. in the N. W. and in the E. by head branches of Yantic r. The v. is pleasantly situated on the high ground near the centre of the t., and is the site of Bacon Academy, founded in 1800 by the donation of $35,000 from the gentleman whose name it perpetuates. The building is of brick, three stories high, 75 feet long and 84 wide. It usually has from 90 to 100 scholars. The t. is essentially an agricultural district, and has several saw and grist mills. Pop. 2,463.

COLCHESTER, t. and p. o., Chittenden co., Verm.: on Lake Champlain, into which it projects in the form of a peninsula, forming on each side extensive bays. Lamoille r. runs through it and discharges into the lake. Winooski City, a flourishing manufacturing v., is partly within this t., the other part being on the opposite side of the river of the same name, which is spanned by a covered bridge. The t. is traversed by the Vermont Central R. Pop. 2,575.

COLCHESTER, t. and p. o., Delaware co., N. Y.: 76 m. S. W. Albany. The Papacton branch of Delaware r. forms the N. boundary of the t. and Beaver Kill drains it in the S. Pop. 2,184.

COLORADO river, Utah and New Mex. Ter.: a vast river extending from its sources in the Rocky Mountains, near the head waters of the Columbia, the Missouri, Arkansas, and the Del Norte rivers, to the Gulf of California. Its tributaries are gathered from the Cordilleras, through a range of 6 degrees of latitude. Green r., which rises in a number of small lakes at the base of Fremont's Peak, in lat. 49°, is its most northern constituent; farther south it receives the Yampa, the head waters of which almost interlock with those of the north fork of Platte r.; the Uintah r.; the White r.; Grand r., equal in volume to the Upper Colorado itself; the Navajo r.; the Yaquilla r.; the Rio Verden, and others of considerable magnitude. The general course of the river is S. and S. W., receiving the largest and most voluminous of its constituents from the East Mountain country. In about lat. 33° the Rio Gila meets it, and these two rivers enter the Gulf through a common estuary. The topography of the country through which the Colorado passes is as yet little known; but it is averred by those who have traversed the country, that the streams are navigable for hundreds of miles, and that the country is one well adapted to the support of a dense population, its agricultural capacities being equal to the finest lands of the States east of the Cordilleras. Along the banks of the river are found numerous ruins of cities, attributed to the Aztecs, and which in their architecture discover a high state of civilization in the builders. At the present day the whole region is a wilderness, inhabited only by the wild Indian.

COLORADO river, Tex.: one of the great rivers of the country, extending from its source in the Guadalupe Mountains, in an E. and S. E. direction to Matagorda Bay and the Gulf of Mexico, a distance of about 600 miles. It is navigable to Austin City for small steamboats, and is capable of great improvements in its whole length. At and near its mouth it is obstructed by rafts. About 3 m. above Austin, a rocky ledge extends entirely across the stream, and obstructs navigation. The river has worn in this ledge many deep, narrow channels, through which the water rushes with the velocity of a mill-race. The current of the river is usually rapid throughout, and the waters quite limpid and pure, but when swollen by heavy rains, they sweep down immense volumes of red mud, sand, and silicious pebbles, from which fact the name Colorado has been derived. The country along the banks of this river is now thickly settled by farmers chiefly from Germany and other European States. The German settlements are models of economy and scientific farming.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

THE District of Columbia, the seat of the Government of the United States, originally occupied a square of ten miles, on both sides of Potomac River, and comprised portions of Virginia and Maryland, ceded to the United States for the use of the federal government. In 1846, however, that portion of the Territory south of the river was retroceded to Virginia, and hence the present territory lies altogether on its north bank, and contains only 60 square miles.

The Maryland act of cession was passed on the 23d December, 1788, and that of Virginia on the 3d December, 1789. Subsequent acts were passed by these States confirming the location.

This District was established in pursuance of a clause of the Constitution of 1789 (Sec. VIII.—17), which declares that Congress shall have power "to exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square), as may by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States;" and further, in pursuance of an Act of Congress, approved 16th July, 1790, which declared "that a district of territory, not exceeding ten miles square, to be located as hereafter directed, on the river Potomac, at some space between the mouths of the Eastern Branch and Conococheague, be, and the same is hereby accepted, for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States; and that the President be authorized to appoint three Commissioners to survey, and by proper metes and bounds define and limit, a district of territory under the limitations above mentioned."

By a proclamation of the President, dated 30th March, 1791, the following were defined as the boundaries of the territory: "Beginning at Jones' Point, being the upper cape of Hunting Creek, in Virginia, and at an angle of 45 degrees west of the north, and running in a direct line ten miles for the first line; then beginning again at the same Jones' Point, and running another direct line, at a right angle with the first, across the Potomac, ten miles, for the second line; then from the terminations of the said first and second lines, running two other direct lines of ten miles each, the one crossing the Eastern Branch and the other the Potomac, and meeting each other in a point." The diagonal lines of this square run north and south, east and west, and, consequently, its angles are formed at the cardinal points.

The District of Columbia, as now demarked, contains only one county, that of Washington; and in this are comprised the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and what are denominated the country parts. The statistical condition of this county, etc., in 1850, as exhibited in the census of that year, is as follows:

The employments of the District embrace almost every branch of national industry. Its manufactures and commerce are extensive, and its agriculture, though confined chiefly to the production of city-market products, is in a highly flourishing condition. In relation to these subjects, the census of 1850 supplies the following returns :

Occupied Lands, &c.—Improved lands, 16,267 acres, and unimproved lands, 11,187 acres, valued at $1,730,460.

Number of farms, &c.—Value of farming implements and machinery, $40,320.

Live-Stock.—Horses 824, asses and mules 57, milch cows 813, working oxen 104, other cattle 123, sheep 150, swine 1,685—valued in the aggregate at $71,643.

Agricultural Products.—Wheat, 17,370 bushels; rye, 5,509; Indian corn, 65,230; oats, 8,134; barley, 75; buckwheat, 378; peas and beans, 7,754; Irish potatoes, 28,292; sweet potatoes, 3,497 bushels; tobacco, 7,800 pounds; hay, 2,279 tons; clover seed, 3 bushels; hops, 15 pounds; wine, 803 gallons; value of the products of orchards, $14,843; and of market-gardens, $67,222; beeswax and honey, 550; wool, 525 pounds; butter, 14,872 pounds; cheese, 1,500 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered, $9,038. Value of home-made manufactures, $2,075.

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested, $1,000,000; value of raw material, fuel, &c., consumed, $1,000,000; average number of hands employed, 1,000; males 500, and females 500; average monthly cost of male labor, $10,000, and of female labor, $5,000; annual value of products, $1,000,000. The whole number of manufacturing establishments, producing to the value of $500 and upward annually, was 427, and of these one was engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods, one in that of woolen goods, and two in making castings of iron—the remainder being distributed to a variety of handicrafts. The statistics of the specified manufactures were as follows :

Commerce, Internal Communication, &c.—The foreign commerce of the District is limited. In the year ending 30th June, 1850, the exports and imports were as follows: Exports—domestic produce—in American vessels, $72,175; in foreign vessels, $8,213; total domestic produce, $80,388; foreign produce—in American vessels, $200; total exports, $80,588. Imports—in American vessels, $59,219; in foreign vessels, 600; total, 59,819—balance in favor of exports, $20,769. The number of vessels entered during the year was nine, of an aggregate burden of 1,414 tons; and the number cleared, ten vessels, of 1,720 tons. Of the vessels entered, two, and 154 tons, were foreign, and of those cleared, two, and 200 tons—the remainder being American. Georgetown is the only port. Alexandria, formerly a district city, has eight times the amount of foreign commerce, owing probably to its being the eastern terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

The tonnage owned within the District is 17,010 tons, of which 2,796 is registered, and the remainder enrolled and licensed, and employed in the coasting trade and on the canal. The steam marine measures 1,949 tons. During the year 1849-50, there were built 8 sloops and canal boats of 288 tons burden.

The District is connected with the interior by numerous fine turnpikes, and by railroads diverging from the neighborhood on both sides of the Potomac, and also through that river and its several branches. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal has its terminus at Georgetown, and extends to a western terminus at Cumberland, to which point and along the whole line of its route an active commerce with the District is carried on. The railroads of the District are the Washington Branch R. R., connecting it with Baltimore, and the West and South; and diverging from Alexandria, which is virtually a part of the metropolis, are the Orange and Alexandria R. R. (which connects at Gordonsville, its S. terminus, with the Virginia Central R. R.); and the Manassas Gap R. R., which extends into the heart of elevated valleys beyond the first ridge of the Alleghanies. These avenues open to the national capital a respectable sphere of commerce, and when completed will be the means of greatly enlarging the trade and general interests of the place.

Government, etc.—The government of the District is vested solely in Congress. It has no representation, nor any voice in the election of federal officers. The only fundamental laws, beyond the Constitution of the United States, to which its governors are subject are those which were in force in Maryland at the period of the cession of the jurisdiction of that State in 1788. WASHINGTON and GEORGETOWN are the cities of the District: these are described under their proper captions.

COLUMBIA county, Flor. Situate N., and contains 2,400 sq. m. Drained E. by creeks of St. Mary's and St. John's rivers, and W. by tributaries of Suwanee r., which forms its boundary in that direction. It contains several small lakes and springs, the sources of its streams. Surface generally level, covered with pines, and in many parts swampy. Okefinokee Swamp extends from Georgia into this county. The soils are sandy and mostly unfit for cultivation, but there are exceptions. Farms 475; manuf. 3; dwell. 569, and pop.—wh. 3,541, fr. col. 1, sl. 1,266—total 4,508. Capital: Alligator.

COLUMBIA county, Ga. Situate E., and contains 580 sq. m. Drained by Little r. and other tributaries of Savannah r., which rise on its N. E. border. Surface undulating, and soils generally fertile. The chief products are cotton, Indian corn, and other grains. Gold is also a production of the county, but in no large quantities. Farms 489; manuf. 7; dwell. 751, and pop.—wh. 3,617, fr. col. 72, sl. 8,272—total 11,961. Capital: Appling. Public Works: Georgia R. R.

COLUMBIA county, N. Y. Situate E. between Hudson r. and the State line of Massachusetts, and contains 624 sq. m. Drained by Kinderhook, Claverack, Copake, and other creeks of Hudson r. Surface varied, chiefly consisting of two longitudinal valleys; soils highly fertile. Pine, hickory, oak, maple, elm, and chestnut are the principal forest trees. Iron, lead, manganese, zinc, marble, and other building stone are abundant. Mineral springs, sulphurous and chalybeate, are found in Lebanon and Stockport. The county has great facilities for commerce, and in manufactures has made great progress. Its agricultural products are the cereals, potatoes, butter, cheese, and wool. Farms 250; manuf. 208; dwell. 7,029, and pop.—wh. 41,771, fr. col. 1,302—total 43,073. Capital: Hudson City. Public Works: Hudson River R. R.; Harlem R. R.; Albany and West Stockbridge (western) R. R.; Hudson and Berkshire R. R.; Lebanon Springs R. R., etc.

COLUMBIA county, Penn. Situate N. E. centrally, and contains 650 sq. m. Drained by Fishing, Cattawissa, Big Roaring, and other creeks of the E. branch of Susquehanna r., which traverses it from N. E. to S. W. Surface broken and uneven, wooded, and the soils generally fertile, producing the grains in great abundance. Iron and coal underlie the greater part of the county and have been worked successfully. Potter's earth is also found. Farms 1,179; manuf. 291; dwell. 2,924, and pop.—wh. 17,607, fr. col. 103—total 17,710. Capital: Bloomsburg. Public Works: North Branch Canal and Cattawissa R. R., etc.

COLUMBIA county, Wisc. Situate centrally, and contains 796 sq. m. Drained by the Neenah or Fox r. on the N., by Wisconsin r. on the W., and a branch of Rock r. on the S. E. The Neenah and Wisconsin here approximate each other closely, and their navigation is united by means of a canal cut through Winnebago portage. The surface is level prairie interspersed with groves, and the soils are exceedingly fertile. Farms 883; manuf. 24; dwell. 1,853, and pop.—wh. 9,547, fr. col. 13—total 9,565. Capital: Fort Winnebago. Public Works: Portage Canal.

COLUMBIA, p. v., Henry co., Ala.: on the E. side of Chatahoochee r., 100 m. S. E. Montgomery.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Chicot co., Ark.: on the isthmus between the Mississippi r. and Old River Lake, 142 m. S. E. Little Rock. It is a pleasant v., with 7 or 8 stores, and about 800 inhabitants. The whole country round is one cluster of cotton plantations.

COLUMBIA, t. and p. v., Tolland co., Conn.: 21 m. E. S. E. Hartford. Drained by a branch of Willimantic r., which affords water-power. Surface uneven, and soils gravelly—well adapted to grazing. It has but few manufactures. Pop. 2,041.

COLUMBIA, p. v., Fayette co., Ind.: on Garrison's cr. of White Water r., about 3 m. W. of the latter, and 51 m. E. S. E. Indianapolis.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Whitley co., Ind.: on the N. W. side of Blue r., 105 m. N. N. E. Indianapolis. It is a flourishing v. and has about 600 inhabitants.

COLUMBIA, p. v., Monroe co., Ill.: 97 m. S. by W. Springfield, and 13 m. S. of Illinoistown on the Mississippi r.

COLUMBIA, v., Wapello co., Ia.: on the N. side of Des Moines r., 61 m. S. W. by W. Iowa City.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Adair co., Ky.: on Russell's cr. of Green r., 79 m. S. S. E. Frankfort. Pop. 600.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Caldwell par., La.: on the W. side Wachita r., 124 m. N. N. W. Baton Rouge. It contains the county C. H. and about 200 inhabitants.

COLUMBIA, t. and p. v., Washington co., Me.: in the S. part of the co., 112 m. E. by N. Augusta. Pleasant River Bay sets up to its S. border, and the river itself passes through the t., furnishing excellent mill sites. Its trade is considerable, particularly in lumber. The v. is located at the head of tide water, on Pleasant r. Pop. of t. 1,140.

COLUMBIA, t. and p. o., Jackson co., Mich.: on North Raisin r., 45 m. S. S. E. Lansing. The t. is well drained by numerous lakes and streams, and is one of the most flourishing in the county. Pop. 1,140.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Boone co., Mo.: on the W. side of Hinckson's branch of Rocheperce r., a tributary of Missouri r., 27 m. N. N. W. Jefferson City.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Marion co., Miss.: on the E. side of Pearl r., 77 m. S. S. E. Jackson.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Tyrrell co., N. Car.: on the E. side of Scoupermonger cr., 3 or 4 m. from its confluence with Albemarle Sound, and 163 m. E. Raleigh.

COLUMBIA, t. and p. o., Coos co., N. Hamp.: on the E. side of Connecticut r., 108 m. N. by W. Concord. The surface is uneven and mountainous, and has several rapid creeks flowing to the Connecticut. There are also several small ponds in the t., on the banks of one of which, Lime Pond, vast quantities of shells are found, from which lime is made. Pop. 762.

COLUMBIA, t. and p. v., Herkimer co., N. Y.: about 10 m. S. of the village of Herkimer, and 68 m. W. N. W. Albany.

The t. is drained by the head streams of the Unadilla and Susquehanna rivers, and by creeks flowing N. to the Mohawk r. Pop. 2,001.

COLUMBIA, p. v., Warren co., N. Jer.: on the E. side of Delaware r., at the mouth of Paulin's Kill, 52 m. N. N. W. Trenton.

COLUMBIA, t. and p. o., Hamilton co., Ohio: on the N. side of the Ohio and Little Miami r., 6 m. E. Cincinnati and 96 m. S. W. Columbus. The Little Miami R. R. traverses its S. border in the valley of the river. Pop. 2,416.

COLUMBIA, p. v., Lancaster co., Penn.: on the E. bank of Susquehanna r., over which there is a bridge 5,690 feet long, resting on stone piers. It is connected with Havre de Grace by the Tide Water Canal, and the Philadelphia and Columbia R. R. passes through it and branches off to the N. W., to a junction with the Lancaster and Harrisburg R. R. It has considerable trade with Baltimore and Philadelphia. The borough contains a town hall, jail, 18 churches, and a number of other public buildings; and it is supplied with water, through pipes, from some springs in the vicinity. The "C. Spy" is published weekly. Pop. 4,340.

COLUMBIA, p. city, and cap. Richland dist., S. Car., and capital of the State: on the E. side of Congaree r., immediately below the confluence of its constituents, Broad and Saluda rivers, in lat. 33° 57', and long. 81° 07' W., 500 m. S. by W. Washington. The r. is here open to light draft navigation. The city is built on an elevated plain of about 3 or 4 miles in extent—the descent sloping in all directions gradually. It was founded in 1757, and is laid out on the rectangular plan, the streets crossing each other at right angles, and 100 feet wide. The principal buildings are the State House, the county buildings, market house, banking houses, academies, and churches. The State House, in the central part of the city, is 170 feet long and 60 feet wide, two stories high. Columbia is also the seat of the South Carolina College, founded in 1804, and which, in 1850, had 8 professors and 195 students, and a library of 17,000 volumes. The college buildings are very extensive and of brick, surmounting one of which is a fine observatory, which possesses apparatus of great value. This institution is under the patronage of the State. The Southern Theological Seminary is also located here. It is a Presbyterian institution, and in 1850 it had 6 professors and 32 students, with a library of 4,600 volumes. The dwelling houses are chiefly of wood, but there are several built of brick in a style of elegance becoming the capital of the State. The city is supplied with pure water from springs, raised by steam-power, and distributed through iron pipes. The high situation the city occupies contributes greatly to the health of the inhabitants, and also affords an extensive view of the surrounding scenery, which is chiefly a cotton and corn region, in the highest state of culture.

Columbia has three daily and two weekly newspapers—the dailies are, the "State Rights Republican" (dem.), the "South Carolinian" (dem.), and the "Telegraph" (indep.), the last two of which issue also tri-weekly and weekly editions; and the weeklies are the "Palmetto State Banner" (dem.), and the "South Carolina Temperance Advocate." The city has also considerable manufactures, which have been altogether initiated within the past decade, and its trade and commercial connection has greatly advanced since the completion of the lines of railroad diverging in all directions from this the chief railroad centre of the State, and when the system proposed for South Carolina shall have formed junctions with the lines of the surrounding States, the commercial prosperity of this city will be indefinitely enhanced. The railroads now centering in Columbia are—the Columbia Branch of the South Carolina R. R.; the Charlotte and South Carolina R. R.; and the Greenville and Columbia R. R., with their branches and connections West and North. The design is to continue the last through Rabun Gap to Chattanooga, thus connecting this place directly with the Ohio Valley railroads, and those extending to and beyond the Mississippi river. Pop. 4,600.

COLUMBIA, p. v., and cap. Maury co., Tenn.: on the S. side of Duck r., 39 m. S. by W. Nashville. Jackson College, founded 1833, is located here, and in 1850 had 5 professors, 26 students, and a library of 2,500 volumes. Two newspapers, the "Tennessee Democrat" (dem.), and the "Maury Intelligencer" (whig), are published weekly; and the "Guardian" (literary), monthly. The public buildings are the C. II. and county jail, and the village also contains several stores and about 1,600 inhabitants. The railroad from Nashville via Florence, etc., to Jackson and New Orleans, will pass through or near this place.

COLUMBIA, p. v., Brazoria co., Tex.: on the W. side of Brazos r., 38 m. from the gulf, and 154 m. S. E. Austin City. It is a flourishing village and enjoys considerable river trade. Pop. 360.

COLUMBIA, p. o., Fluvanna co., Virg.: on the N. side of James r., where it is joined by the Rivanna r., 49 m. W. N. W. Richmond. Pop. 300.

COLUMBIA CENTRE, p. o., Licking co., Ohio: 33 m. N. E. by E. Columbus.

COLUMBIA CITY, p. v., Clark co., Oreg. Ter.: on the N. bank of Columbia r., 57 m. N. Salem. It has good prospects of becoming one of the commercial places of future Oregon.

COLUMBIA CROSS ROADS, p. o., Bradford co., Penn.: 122 m. N. by E. Harrisburg.

COLUMBIA FURNACE, p. v., Shenandoah co., Virg.: 112 m. N. W. Richmond.

COLUMBIA (OR OREGON) river, Oreg. Ter.: is the great river of the country, and the recipient of all the other rivers of the territory, having their origin eastward of the east range of mountains. Its N. branch rises in the Rocky Mountains in about 50° N. lat. and 116° W. long., and thence pursues a N. route to near McGillivray's Pass. Here the river is 3,600 feet above the sea-level, and, receiving Canoe r., it then turns S., and in its course to Fort Colville it successively takes up the waters of numerous tributaries, the chief of which are the Kootanie, or Flat Bow, and Flat Head or Clark's rivers. The Columbia is thus far surrounded by high mountains, and often expands into a chain of lakes. At Colville its elevation is 2,049 feet above the sea, having fallen 556 feet in 220 miles. To the S. of this point it tends to the W., receiving Spokane r. from the E.; thence it pursues a W. course for 60 m., and bending to the S., receives Okanagon r., which has its source in a line of lakes extensively susceptible of canoe navigation. The Columbia thence passes S. until it reaches Wallawalla, in 45° N. lat., and receives the Saptin or Lewis r.; here the elevation of the Columbia is 1,286 feet, and its width about 3,500 feet. It now takes its last turn to the W., receiving the Umatilla, Quisnel's, John Day's, and Clute rivers from the S., and Cathlamet's from the N., and pursuing a rapid course for 50 m., it passes the gorge of the Cascade Mountains in a series of falls and rapids, that form an insurmountable obstacle to the passage of boats, even in time of flood, and are overcome by portages. From this point there is still-water navigation for 40 miles, when rapids again interrupt free sailing, but hence to the ocean 120 miles, the river, though frequently obstructed by bars, is open to vessels of less than 12 feet draft. In this part of its course it receives the Willamette r. from the S., and the Cowlitz from the N. The Willamette is navigable for small vessels to within three miles of its falls. Within a distance of 20 miles from the ocean, the Columbia is greatly increased in width, and at its mouth, between Cape Disappointment and Cape Adams, its width is seven miles, but from each of these capes a sand-bar extends which renders the actual navigable channel contracted and narrow. The mouth of the Columbia was discovered by Captain Gray, of Boston, commander of ship Columbia, of 220 tons, on the 11th May, 1792; and on the strength of this discovery the United States based their right to the territory watered by its tributaries.

COLUMBIANA county, Ohio. Situate E., and contains 740 sq. m. Drained by Little Beaver r. and its branches, and the Ohio r. washes its S. E. borders. Surface in the S. hilly and broken, with a light soil—in the N. and middle more level, with deep and productive soils. Limestone and water lime exist in all parts; salt springs in the S., marl in the N., and iron ore and bituminous coal in the central districts; live-stock is numerous; and the agricultural products very large; and coal and salt have long been produced in large quantities. Farms 2,388; manuf. 180; dwell. 5,884, and pop.—wh. 83,444, fr. col. 177—total 83,621. Capital: New Lisbon. Public Works: Ohio and Pennsylvania R. R.; Cleveland and Pittsburg R. R., etc.; and the Sandy and Beaver Canal.

COLUMBIANA, p. v., and cap. Shelby co., Ala.: 7 m. W. of Coosa r., and 58 m. N. by W. Montgomery.

COLUMBIANA, p. v., Columbiana co., Ohio: on the line of the Ohio and Pennsylvania R. R., 59 m. from Pittsburg and 182 m. E. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 600.

COLUMBIAN GROVE, p. o., Lunenburg co., Virg.: 66 m. S. W. Richmond.

COLUMBUS county, N. Car. Situate S. E., and contains 590 sq. m. Drained by Lumber r. and its tributaries, and in the S. and E. by White Marsh and Beaver creeks of Waccamaw r. Surface low, and somewhat marshy. Soils good with some exceptions, producing corn, potatoes, and rice. Farms 899; manuf. 5; dwell. 777, and pop.—wh. 4,257, fr. col. 149, sl. 1,503—total 5,909. Capital: Whitesville. Public Works: Wilmington and Manchester R. R.

COLUMBUS, p. v., Hempstead co., Ark.: 122 m. S. W. Little Rock.

COLUMBUS, p. v., Columbia co., Flor.: on the E. side of Suwanee r., immediately below the confluence of Withlacoochee r., 64 m. E. by S. Tallahassee.

COLUMBUS, p. v., and cap. Muscogee co., Ga.: on the E. side of Chattahoochee r., at the head of steam navigation, and immediately below the falls of the r., which have a descent of 111 feet in 3 miles, 118 m. W. by S. Milledgeville. It is 175 miles above the junction with Flint r., and 275 m. above Appalachicola Bay. Immediately below the falls the river has a width of only 118 yards, but soon expands to 250 yards wide. The site of the v. is 60 feet above the ordinary height of the r., and covers 1,200 acres. Two streets running parallel with the r. N. and S., are 165 feet wide, and six others have a width of 132 feet; these are intersected at right angles by twelve other streets, which are 95 feet wide. It contains a C. H., jail, several banks, a market-house, numerous churches, and about 2,400 dwellings; and it also has several large cotton mills, and woolen factories and flouring mills. It is one of the great commercial centres of Georgia, and a depôt of a large extent of rich cotton country. The Muscogee R. R. terminates here, and extends hence to Macon, connecting with the Central R. R. to Savannah, and the Macon and Western R. R., etc., to Nashville and Knoxville, Tenn.; from Gerard, on the opposite side of the river, a railroad is about to be built to Mobile. The bridge over the r. at this point cost $30,000. A large number of steamboats ply on the r., carrying cotton, etc., to the seaboard and New Orleans; at all seasons, boats drawing 5 feet of water can come up to this place. Columbus is a v. of modern date, having been laid out in 1828; its growth has been rapid—in 1840 it had 3,114 inhabitants, and in 1850, about 8,000. It has three newspapers, the "C. Times," published tri-weekly and weekly, and the "C. Enquirer" and the "Southern Sentinel," published weekly.

COLUMBUS, p. v., and cap. Bartholomew co., Ind.: on the E. bank of the E. fork of White r., immediately below the mouth of Flat Rock cr., 41 m. S. S. E. Indianapolis. Its situation is a fine one, on high ground overlooking the valleys of White r., Flat Rock cr., and Haw cr., which nearly surround it. The line of the Madison and Indianapolis R. R.

passes through the v., and here also is the N. terminus of the Jeffersonville R. R. It is a place of considerable manufactures, and its trade and commerce, fostered by its ample facilities of transportation, are large and ever increasing. It has two newspapers, the "Spirit of the West" (whig), and the "C. Democrat," both issued weekly. Pop. about 4,500.

COLUMBUS, p. v., Adams co., Ill.: on the Quincy and Columbus R. R., 80 m. W. by N. Springfield, and 15 m. from Quincy, on the Mississippi r.

COLUMBUS, p. v., and cap. Hickman co., Ky.: on the Mississippi r., 25 m. below the mouth of the Ohio r., and 252 m. W. S. W. Frankfort.

COLUMBUS, t. and p. v., St. Clair co., Mich.: on Belle r., 97 m. E. Lansing. Pop. 3,077.

COLUMBUS, p. city, and cap. Lowndes co., Miss.: at the head of steamboat navigation, and E. of Tombigbee r., 126 m. N. E. Jackson. The city is built on an elevated bank, 120 feet above the r., and contains, besides the court-house and other county buildings, 7 churches and several large warehouses. There is a bridge across the river which cost $50,000. The trade centering here is large, the city being the chief depôt for the cotton, etc., of an extensive country; and the inhabitants enjoy the benefit of a well-conducted paper, the "C. Democrat," which is published weekly. Pop. 8,000.

COLUMBUS, p. v., Johnson co., Mo.: on Black r., 92 m. W. by N. Jefferson City.

COLUMBUS, p. v., Burlington co., N. Jer.: 11 m. S. by E. Trenton.

COLUMBUS, t. and p. v., Chenango co., N. Y.: on the W. side of Unadilla cr., 80 m. W. Albany. The v. is a small agricultural settlement. Pop. of t. 1,881.

COLUMBUS, p. city, and cap. Franklin co., Ohio, and cap. of the State of Ohio: on the E. side of the Scioto r., just below the confluence of the Whetstone r., in lat. 39° 57' N., and long. 89° 08' W., 396 m. from Washington. Previous to 1812, when it was fixed on for the State capital, the site of the city was in the wilderness. In 1820 it contained 1,400 inhabitants; in 1830, 2,439; in 1840, 6,048; and in 1850, 17,888.

The land on which the city is built rises gradually from the r., and the streets are laid out at right angles. Broad-street extends from the river along the National Road to the E. of the city, and is 120 feet wide, and High-street, 100 feet wide, crosses Broad at the N. W. corner of the Public Square, of 10 acres, running N. and S. This is the principal business street. All other streets are 88 feet wide, and the alleys 33 feet wide. The public buildings are the Capitol or State House, the Penitentiary, asylums severally for the insane, the deaf and dumb, and the blind; several colleges, seminaries, and numerous churches of all denominations. The old State House was destroyed by fire on the 1st Feb., 1852, and in consequence a great number of documents illustrating the history of the State were lost, never to be restored. The new State House is one of the most magnificent buildings in the Union. It is 304 feet long and 184 feet wide, covering an area of 55,936 square feet. The basement is 16 feet above the common surface; the height of blocking course is 62 feet, and to the top of the rotunda 157 feet, its diameter being 64 feet. The first floor contains 28 fire-proof rooms for the public offices; and the second floor contains the Hall of Representatives, which is 84 feet long and 7½ feet wide, the Senate Chamber 56 feet by 7½; the Library, the U. S. Court room, and 26 committee rooms. The State Penitentiary is also a spacious and elegant edifice on the Scioto r., N. W. of the State House. It is a splendid building, of hewn limestone; the centre is 56 feet long, 4 stories high, and the two wings each 200 feet long and 8 stories high. The private dwellings are generally neat, substantial, and many of them elegant.

The avenues of travel and commerce connecting Columbus with other parts of the State and Union, are the National Road, a branch of the Ohio Canal, the Columbus and Xenia

R. R., the Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R., the Central Ohio R. R., etc. The railroads are the creations of the last ten years, and have been the cause of the extraordinary triplication of the population in that period. As a commercial depôt, the city has eminent facilities—as a central position, in regard to every portion of the State, its location on one of the largest rivers, and its grand works of internal improvement. It has numerous and extensive manufactures, and, on the whole, is one of the most prosperous among western cities. There are published within the city two daily newspapers, both of which also issue tri-weekly and weekly editions; four weekly, one semi-monthly, two monthly, and one occasional. The dailies are the "Ohio State Journal" (whig), and the "Ohio Statesman" (dem.). The weeklies are the "Ohio Standard" (whig), the "Dollar," and "Swan's Elevator" (neutral), and "Der Westbote" (Germ.). The semi-monthly is the "Ohio Cultivator" (agric.). The monthlies are the "Western Literary Magazine," and the "Ark;" and the "Conventional Reporter" is published occasionally.

COLUMBUS, t. and p. o., Warren co., Penn.: 159 m. N. W. Harrisburg. Iron is manufactured in this t. Pop. 1,422.

CONCORD, t. and p. v., Somerset co., Me.: on the W. side of Kennebec r., 42 m. N. by W. Augusta. Pop. 550.

CONCORD, t., p. v., and one of the capitals of Middlesex co., Mass.: on both sides of Concord r., 17 m. W. N. W. Boston. The t. has a soil of average fertility, and is well drained by the Assabet and Sudbury rivers, which here unite, forming Concord r. The v. contains a C. H., jail, several churches, and about 200 dwellings. Here, on the 19th April, 1775, was made the first forcible resistance to the British power, and a handsome monument now marks the spot where the first blood of the Revolution was spilled. The monument is a granite obelisk, 25 feet high, with a square base 5½ feet in diameter, and about 3 feet high, with an appropriate inscription on a panel of Italian marble. Concord was the first inland settlement in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, and was incorporated as early as 1635. Its Indian name was Musketaquid. The General Court of the colony frequently held its sessions in this town, and in the year 1774 the Provincial Congress selected it as their place of meeting. The manufactures of Concord consist of cotton goods, satinet, and flannels; boots, shoes, hats, cabinet ware, agricultural implements, etc. Many of the establishments are on an extensive scale. The Fitchburg R. R. passes through the town 20 m. from Boston and 30 from Fitchburg. Pop. 2,249.

CONCORD, t. and p. v., Jackson co., Mich.: on the head streams of Kalamazoo r., 36 m. S. Lansing. The v. is located on the stage route from Jackson to White Pigeon, 14 m. from Jackson. The water-power of the neighborhood is immense, and in this t. are found some of the best farming lands of the co. A mile S. of the v. are several mineral springs. Pop. 934.

CONCORD, p. v., Callaway co., Mo.: at the head of Aux Vases r., 31 m. N. by E. Jefferson City.

CONCORD, p. v., and cap. Cabarras co., N. Car.: on the W. side of Big Cold Water cr., a branch of Rocky r. of the Yadkin, 102 m. W. S. W. Raleigh. It is a considerable v. of some 400 inhabitants.

CONCORD, t., p. v., and cap. Merrimac co., N. Hamp., and cap. of the State: it lies on both sides of the Merrimac r., in lat. $43^{\circ} 12' 29''$ N., and long. $71^{\circ} 29'$ W., 474 m. N. E. Washington. There are five ponds in the town, the largest of which are Turkey Pond in the S. W., and Long Pond in the N. W. sections, the outlet streams of which furnish extensive hydraulic power. The Contocook r. joins the Merrimac on the N. line of the t., and forms at the junction the celebrated "Duston's Island." The interval lands of the Merrimac are very fertile, and highly cultivated. Soon after entering Concord, the r. passes over Sewell's Falls, and thence has no natural obstruction until it reaches the falls at the S. E. extremity of the t., where is a vast water-power. Locks are here constructed, and boat navigation secured. The river is here about 100 yards wide, but during freshets the water rises 20 feet above the ordinary level, presenting to the eye a body of water a mile wide. There are handsome bridges spanning the river. There are three villages in the t., the principal of which, and the seat of its chief business, is on the W. side of the r., extending along it about 2 m. The State House, Court House, State Prison, and other public buildings are in this v. The State House occupies a beautiful site in the centre, and is constructed of hewn granite. It is 126 feet in length, 49 feet in width, and with a projection in the centre of 4 feet on each front. The cost of the building was \$80,000. The State Prison is also a massive granite building, 70 by 36 feet, surrounded by a high stone wall. The second principal village is at Sewall's Falls, and the other in the W. part of the town.

Concord, originally called Penacook, was granted by Massachusetts to a company of settlers, 17th Jan., 1725, and the settlement was begun in the following year. In 1733 it was incorporated under the name of Rumford, which name was changed in 1765 to Concord. The population in 1775 was 1,052; in 1790, 1,747; in 1800, 2,052; in 1810, 2,393; in 1820, 2,838; in 1830, 3,727; in 1840, 4,897; and in 1850, 8,584, its progress during the last decade having been stimulated by the development of its manufacturing facilities and the extension of the railroad system centering within it. Concord is now, indeed, one of the chief seats of New England industry. It has numerous large cotton factories, paper mills, boot and shoe shops, and a variety of other industrial establishments. Its neighborhood also abounds in granite, which is exported. In the t. are also potteries, fulling mills, etc.; and in the publishing business Concord has long been remarkably successful. In 1850 four newspapers were published weekly, and one semi-monthly; the weekly papers were, the "N. H. Patriot and State Gazette" (dem.); the "N. H. Statesman" (whig); the "Independent Democrat" (free soil); and the "Congregational Journal" (relig.); and the semi-monthly, was the "Under-Current," a paper devoted to temperance.

Concord lies on the route of travel and commerce between Boston and Montreal, and Boston and the far West, and hence has become a principal centre of the New England system of railroads. It has also a railroad connection with Portsmouth. The railroads centering here are, the Concord R. R., extending to Nashua and Boston; the Boston, Concord, and Montreal R. R., extending to Haverhill on the Connecticut, and to Montreal; the Concord and Claremont R. R.; the Portsmouth and Concord R. R.; the Northern New Hampshire R. R., extending to West Lebanon, on the Connecticut, and continued by the Vermont, New York, and Canada railroads to Rouse's Point, Montreal, Ogdensburg, Kingston, etc.

CONCORD, p. v., Franklin co., Penn.: 61 m. W. by S. Harrisburg.

CONCORD, t. and p. v., Lake co., Ohio: 3 m. S. of Painesville and 146 N. E. Columbus. The town is drained by several tributaries of Grand r., which afford excellent mill-sites. Pop. 1,031.

CONCORD, p. v., Harrison co., Tex.: 266 m. N. E. Austin City.

CONCORD, t. and p. o., Essex co., Verm.: on the N. W. side of the Connecticut r., 37 m. E. by N. Montpelier. It is drained in the N. W. by a branch of Passumpsic r., and two ponds in the S. E. part of the t. discharge their waters into Connecticut r., affording mill-sites. Concord is an excellent grazing country.

CONCORD, p. v., Appomattox co., Virg.: 82 m. W. S. W. Richmond. Pop. 1,152.

CONCORD river, Miss.: formed by the union of Assabert and Sudbury rivers at Concord, and after passing through the towns of Bedford, Bellerica, and Chelmsford, it falls into the Merrimac r., between Lowell and Tewkesbury. This r. furnishes the Middlesex Canal with most of its water.

CONCORDIA parish, La. Situate W. of Mississippi r., and contains 750 sq. m. The Tensas r. lies on its W. border, and Red r. on its S. border. The surface is level, and except a few elevated strips, liable to inundation in times of high water. The soils are exceedingly fertile, and originally were covered with a heavy forest growth. The chief product is cotton, of which a large amount is produced. Farms 145; manuf. 0; dwell. 219, and pop.—wh. 823, fr. col. 1, sl. 6,934—total 7,758. Capital: Vidalia. Public Works: a R. R. projected from Vidalia to Shreveport.

CONCORDIA, p. v., Bolivar co., Miss.: on Lake Concordia, 121 m. N. N. W. Jackson.

CONCORDIA, p. v., Darke co., Ohio: on the E. side of the head stream of White Water r., 93 m. W. Columbus.

CONCORDIA, p. v., Fayette co., Tenn.: on Loosahatchie r., in the N. W. corner of the county, 167 m. W. S. W. Nashville. It contains about 200 inhabitants.

CONCORDVILLE, p. v., Delaware co., Penn.: 79 m. E. by S. Harrisburg.

CONOCOCHIEGUE river, Md.: a tributary of the Potomac r. from Pennsylvania. It empties itself at Williamsport.

CONOCHUE county, Ala. Situate S. middle, and contains 1,476 sq. m. Drained by Escambia r., Burned Corn cr., Murder cr., and others, tributaries of Conecuh r., which passes from N. E. to S. W. in the S. part of the co. Surface low and generally level, and soils moderately fertile, producing cotton, corn, and some rice. Farms 495; manuf. 12; dwell. 847, and pop.—wh. 4,922, fr. col. 6, sl. 4,394—total 9,322. Capital: Sparta. Public Works: Gerard and Mobile R. R., etc.

CONOCHUE river, Ala. and Flor.: rises in Alabama, and passes through Florida into Pensacola Bay. Two miles below the Florida line it receives the Escambia, the name of which it assumes, although the larger stream. It is navigable for more than 100 miles.

CONEMAUGH river, Penn.: rises in the Allegheny Mountains, and runs W. N. W. into the Allegheny r., 29 m. N. N. E. Pittsburg. In the lower part of its course it takes the name of Kiskeminctas. It has salt-works on both its banks, 15 m. N. E. Greensburg. The Pennsylvania Canal passes along its border from Johnstown till it enters into the Allegheny. Its length is about 150 m.

CONERLYS, p. o., Pike co., Miss.: 86 m. S. Jackson.

CONESTOGA, t. and p. v., Lancaster co., Penn.: on Conestoga cr., 39 m. S. E. Harrisburg.

CONESUS, t. and p. v., Livingston co., N. Y.: between Conesus and Hemlock lakes, 195 m. W. Albany. The Buffalo, Corning, and New York R. R. passes through the t. The v. is a small agricultural settlement in the midst of a fine fertile region. Pop. of t. 418.

CONESUS lake, Livingston co., N. Y.: a small sheet of water about 9 m. long and a mile in width. Its depth exceeds 300 feet; its waters are pure and cold, and contain abundance of fish.

CONESVILLE, t. and p. v., Schoharie co., N. Y.: on the E.

side of Schoharie cr., and drained by its tributaries. Distant 36 m. S. W. Albany. Pop. 1,582.

CONEWANGO, t. and p. v., Cattaraugus co., N. Y.: on the cr. so called, 272 m. W. by S. Albany. Pop. 1,403.

CONEWANGO creek, N. Y.: rises in Chautauque and Cattaraugus counties, and flows S. into Alleghany r., receiving the outlet of Chautauque Lake and other tributaries. It affords good boat navigation in season of flood, and is a fine mill-stream.

CONGAREE river, S. Car.: is formed by the union of Broad and Saluda rivers, two fine streams which unite immediately above Columbia, the State capital. The Congaree receives no large affluents, but about 80 miles S. E. of Columbia it is joined by the Wateree from the N. W., and thence the united streams take the name of Santee, a river flowing to the Atlantic Ocean, which it reaches in about 83° 20' N. lat.

CONGRESS, t. and p. o., Wayne co., Ohio: in the N. W. corner of the co., 84 m. N. E. by N. Columbus. In the E. Killbuck cr., and in the W. the Muddy Fork of Walhonding r. drain the surface, and afford fine mill-seats.

CONHOCTON, t. and p. v., Steuben co., N. Y.: on Conhocton r., 185 m. W. S. W. Albany. The Buffalo, Corning, and New York R. R. passes along the valley. Pop. 1,992.

CONHOCTON river, N. Y.: a constituent of the Chemung, about 55 m. long. It is navigable for rafts in high water, and at all seasons furnishes extensive mill-power.

CONINE, p. o., Licking co., Ohio: 33 m. N. E. Columbus. CONKLIN, t. and p. o., Broome co., N. Y.: on both sides of Susquehanna r., 103 m. S. W. Albany. The surface of the t. is hilly, but in the valley of the r. there are alluvial flats. The New York and Erie R. R. runs through the t., 220 m. from New York City. Pop. 2,232.

CONKLIN CENTRE, p. o., Broome co., N. Y.: 106 m. S. W. Albany.

CONNEAUT, t. and p. v., Ashtabula co., Ohio: the most N. E. town of the State, on Lake Erie, 173 m. N. E. Columbus. Conneaut r. drains the whole surface, and at its mouth or harbor the village, a flourishing place, is eligibly situated for commerce, and owns many vessels engaged in the lake trade. The Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula R. R. passes through it, connecting it with the sea-board and the far West by continuous chains of railroads. Conneaut has manufactures and considerable trade, and is destined to become an important commercial depôt. The "C. Reporter" is published weekly. P. of v. 817—t. 2,694.

CONNEAUTVILLE, p. v., Crawford co., Penn.: on the line of the Beaver and Erie Canal, 93 m. from Beaver, on the Ohio r., 38 m. from Erie, and 216 N. W. Harrisburg.

THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, lying between Massachusetts and Long Island Sound, and extending from Rhode Island to New York, is 90 miles in length from E. to W., and in width, from N. to S., from 60 to 70 miles. It is situated between 41° and 42° 02' latitudes N., and between 71° 40' and 73° 43' longitudes W. from Greenwich, or 3° 19' and 5° 22' E. from Washington. The contents of its superficies is estimated at 4,674 square miles.

The aspect of the country is greatly diversified by hills and valleys. The hills are generally of a moderate size, and occur in quick succession, presenting to the traveler a beautiful and constantly-varying scenery. All the principal ranges are continuations of the mountains of the States lying northward. The Housatonic range enters the State in the north-west, and extends in a southerly direction along the Housatonic River to the coast; this is rather a succession of groups and eminences than a continuous range. The Green Mountain range, coming from Vermont and Massachusetts, passes through the State from N. to S., and terminates at West Rock, a bluff 40 feet high, two miles N. W. of New Haven. Between this and the Connecticut River is the Mount Tom range, which, coming from Massachusetts, also traverses this State, and terminates at East Rock, 370 feet high, a little to the north-east of New Haven. The Blue Hills in Southington, a part of this range, have an elevation of 1,000 feet, and are said to be the highest land within the State. On the E. side of the Connecticut is a fourth range, which crosses the river at Chatham and terminates at East Haven.

The principal valleys of the State are the Housatonic on the E., the Connecticut in the centre, and the Quinnebaug in the E. The Valley of the Connecticut varies in breadth from 10 to 16 miles, and extends northward from Middletown, having in this State a length of about 30 miles. This is a rich agricultural district. The valleys of the Quinnebaug and Housatonic have also fertile soil, and produce fine crops. The scenery of the valleys is magnificent, and the landscapes varied and romantic. Many of the surrounding hills are cultivated like gardens to the very summit, while others are bald, or only support a few stunted trees and shrubs. The Farmington Valley extends from New Haven N. through the State between the Green Mountains and the Mount Tom range, and is from three to five miles wide. In the hilly parts of the State the soils are of moderate fertility, and are generally acknowledged to be better fitted for grazing than seed-farming.

Few of the streams are of much use to navigation, except in their lower courses. The principal is the Connecticut, which, coming from the N., and pursuing a pretty direct southward course to Middletown, then suddenly turns to the south-east, and so flows on to the Sound. There is a bar at its mouth, but vessels drawing ten feet of water can go up to Middletown, and those drawing only eight feet to Hartford, 50 miles from the Sound. The navigation of the upper course of this river has been improved by means of locks and canals, which secure boat navigation to the mouth of Well's River, in Vermont. The River Tunxis, or Farmington, is the principal tributary of the Connecticut in this State; it rises in the eastern slope of the Green Mountains, in Massachusetts, and runs to the S. as far as Farmington, where it abruptly changes its direction to the N., until, breaking through the trap range, here called the Talcott Mountains, it again flows southwardly, and joins the Connecticut opposite to East Windsor. The Housatonic rises in the western part of Massachusetts, and enters this State near the north-west corner, after which it runs in a southerly and south-easterly course to the Sound; the first part of its course is broken by cataracts, and its entrance is barred against large vessels; it has, however, a sloop navigation for a distance of 12 miles. The Thames, formed by the junction of the Quinnebaug, the Shetucket, and the Yantic at Norwich, empties itself into the Sound at New London, after a navigable course of 14 miles. All these streams and numerous smaller ones, are applicable as motive power, and, besides turning almost all the machinery of the State, are highly favorable to the fertility of the lands through which they pass. Scarcely is there a single square mile in all the country but has one or more sparkling, never-failing rills to refresh the soil and make it productive.

The whole coast of the State lies upon Long Island Sound, which is an extensive gulf or channel, being 140 miles in length and 25 miles wide in its broadest part. It is somewhat narrow at its Atlantic or eastern entrance, but expands in the middle; toward the west it gradually contracts, till it joins the harbor of New York by a narrow and crooked strait called the East River. It admits of a free navigation throughout its whole extent for the largest ships, but in the western strait there was formerly a dangerous whirlpool, at a spot called Hell Gate, where the current is contracted by the rocky shores, and at certain seasons of the tide the navigation was most hazardous. The obstructions, however, were removed by submarine blastings in 1852. The northern shore of the Sound is deeply penetrated by numerous bays and creeks, affording excellent harbors. The harbor of New London is the best in the State—it is spacious, deep, and not liable to be frozen over in winter. New Haven harbor has not so great a depth. Stonington harbor is well protected by a breakwater, and the harbor of Bridgeport has similar improvements. These harbors form so many starting-points of travel or internal trade to the New England States and Canada.

Connecticut produces many valuable minerals. Iron ore of excellent quality and in great abundance, is found in various parts. The copper-mines of Bristol and Plymouth are regarded by many as the most profitable now worked in the United States, not excepting the mines of Lake Superior. The most distinguished scientific man of the State, Professor Silliman, has expressed the confident opinion that they extend from Bristol, in a southerly direction, toward Hampden, for a distance of more than 30 miles, and that, if thoroughly worked, would be sufficient to give profitable employment to 30,000 miners. Already they furnish a large amount of ore. The Plymouth mines are equally rich. The vein here runs from east to west, with a vertical dip, cutting the geological formation of the mountain at right angles, and forming what is termed a rake vein. The working of this mine is only now being commenced, but there is every indication that the coal contained in the vein will yield a copper ore of as good quality and in as large a quantity as the mine now wrought at Bristol has ever produced. Copper also occurs at Granby, where it is found at the junction of the green-stone and new red sand-stone formations. Fine marbles, of different characters, are abundant; and free-stone, extensive quarries of which exist in the mountain regions, furnishes an excellent building material. Zinc, cobalt, and manganese also occur, and plumbago and some other metals of minor importance have been discovered at various times and places. The mineral waters of Stafford have long been celebrated for their medicinal properties.

The soils of Connecticut are generally good, but in some parts better suited to grazing than corn-growing. The Valley of the Connecticut has a strong and fertile argillaceous loam, varying in different sections from a hard, stiff clay, to a light, sandy loam, according to the prevalence of argillaceous or siliceous earth. In the eastern part of the State the prevailing soil is warm, strong, fertile, and excellent for grasses. The north-western part is in some places cold and sterile, but is generally a good grazing country. In the western part of the State are many fertile districts. The climate and vegetation correspond nearly with those of Massachusetts, the climate differing only in being a little more temperate, and the season of growth in being earlier and somewhat more prolonged. The peach perfects its fruit in the southern portion of the State.

The first census of Connecticut, on which any reliance can be placed, was that taken in 1756, and exhibits the then population at 130,611; in 1774, 18 years afterward, it was 197,856; and in 1782 it was found to have increased to an aggregate of 209,150. The first United States' census, taken in 1790, gives the total at that date at 233,141, and from that period its decennial movements have been as exhibited in the following table:

Date of Census.	White Persons.	Colored Persons.		Total Population.	Increase.
		Free.	Slave.		Numerical.	Per cent.
1750	232,551	2,801	2,759	233,141	—	—
1790	244,721	5,330	951	251,002	12,861	5.4
1810	255,279	6,453	310	262,042	11,040	4.4
1820	267,161	7,944	97	275,202	13,160	5.0
1830	289,603	8,047	25	297,675	22,473	8.1
1840	301,557	8,104	17	309,783	12,308	4.1
1850	363,305	7,486	0	370,791	60,813	19.6

Of the total population in 1850, there were persons deaf and dumb, 389; blind, 182; insane, 462; and idiotic, 800; but in this enumeration are included those domiciled in the State hospitals, natives or residents of other States, sent into Connecticut for special purpose.

The State is divided into 8 counties and 145 townships, and contains 6 cities and 12 boroughs; the counties are Fairfield, Hartford, Litchfield, Middlesex, New Haven, New London, Tolland, and Windham; the cities are Bridgeport, Hartford, Middletown, New Haven, New London, and Norwich; and the boroughs are Danbury, Essex, Guilford, Litchfield, New Britain, Newtown, Norwalk, Southport, Stamford, Stonington, Waterbury, and Willimantic.

More equally in Connecticut than in any other State of the American Union, are the several great branches of national industry distributed; and perhaps here, more than elsewhere, have the people a more direct interest in the prosperity of each. There are few large farms or manufactures, and as few persons who have not some ownership in a farm or workshop; and throughout the State the inhabitants are farmers in one season and manufacturers in another, economizing the seasons, and pursuing avocations suitable to each as it occurs. The statistics of the wealth and industry of the State in 1850, as exhibited in the census, &c., of that year, were as follows:

Occupied Lands, &c.—Improved lands, 1,768,178 acres, and unimproved lands, 615,701 acres, valued at $73,726,422. Number of farms, 22,445. Value of farming implements and machinery, $1,892,541.

Live Stock.—Horses 26,579, asses and mules 49, milch cows 85,461, working oxen 46,983, other cattle 80,226, sheep 174,181, and swine 76,472—valued in the aggregate at $7,467,490.

Grain Crops.—Wheat, 41,762 bushels; rye, 600,893 bushels; Indian corn, 1,935,543 bushels; oats, 1,158,738 bushels; barley, 19,099 bushels; and buckwheat, 229,297 bushels.

Other Crops.—Tobacco, 1,267,624 pounds; peas and beans, 19,090 bushels; Irish potatoes, 2,659,725 bushels; sweet potatoes, 80 bushels; hay, 516,181 tons; clover-seed, 13,841 bushels; other grass-seed, 16,608 bushels; hops, 554 pounds; flax, 17,928 pounds; flax-seed, 708 bushels; maple sugar, 50,796 pounds; molasses, 665 gallons; wine, 4,269 gallons, &c. The value of orchard products was $175,118, and of market-garden products, $196,874.

Products of Animals.—Wool, 497,454 pounds; butter, 6,493,119 pounds; cheese, 5,363,277 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered during the year had been $2,202,266. Silk cocoons were produced to the amount of 325 pounds, and beeswax and honey to that of 93,304 pounds.

Home-made Manufactures for the year ending 30th June, 1850, were valued at $192,252.

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested, $00,000,000; value of raw material, fuel, &c., consumed, $0,000,000; average number of hands employed, 00,000—males, 00,000, and females, 00,000; average monthly cost of male labor, $000,000, and of female labor, $00,000; annual value of products, $00,000,000. The whole number of manufacturing establishments producing to the value of $500 and upward in 1850, was 3,913; and of these 128 were cotton factories,

CONNECTICUT.

149 woolen mills, and 91 iron houses, of which 60 manufactured castings, 18 pig iron, and 18 wrought iron. In the cotton manufactures the capital invested amounted to $4,219,100; the cotton consumed in the year ending 30th June, was 89,438 bales, and the value of all raw material, fuel, etc., was $2,500,062; hands employed—2,708 males, and 3,478 females; monthly cost of male labor, $51,679, and of female labor, $41,060; products for the year, 51,750,700 yards of sheeting, etc., and 950,000 pounds of yarn—the aggregate value of products, $4,257,522. The capital invested in woolen manufactures was $3,773,950; wool used, 9,414,100 pounds; value of all raw material, fuel, etc., $3,325,709; hands employed—males, 2,907 (cost per month, $70,141), and females, 2,551 ($33,216); yards of cloth manufactured in the year, 9,408,777, valued at $6,465,216; and the following table will exhibit the state of the iron manufacturing interest:

The total capital invested in the iron manufacture is thus, $1,335,900; the value of raw material, fuel, etc., $999,374; and the annual value of products, $2,064,560. The remaining employments of the aggregate number (3,913) are various, and embrace all descriptions of hardware, cutlery, fire-arms, powder, paper, boots and shoes, and other manufactures. Connecticut, indeed, manufactures every article known to commerce and trade, from a needle or pin to the steam-engine and locomotive—together valued as before set down. The manufacturing industry of the State, however, is not all represented in the census, only establishments producing to the value of $500 annually being those assessed; but it is well known that there are thousands of small shops throughout the country, which, though not noticed by the census, nevertheless, in the aggregate, own a large capital, and produce to a large annual amount—perhaps, indeed, these unnoticed establishments, if aggregated, would add one-third to the apparent extent of the manufacturing interest of the State.

Foreign Commerce.—The direct foreign commerce of Connecticut, although the State enjoys many peculiar facilities for engaging in such, is comparatively of small extent. The exports in the year ending 30th June, 1850, were valued at $241,930, of which $668 was the value of re-exports; and the imports were valued at $372,390. This trade is chiefly with the British North American Provinces and the West India Islands. The shipping employed in carrying the merchandise above represented, consisted of vessels entered 153 (34,152 tons), and vessels cleared 156 (27,317 tons). The amount of shipping owned in the State at the above named period was 113,055 tons, of which 42,511 tons was of the class registered, 63,188 tons enrolled and licensed, and the remainder vessels under 20 tons burden. Of the registered shipping, 11,483 tons were employed in the whale fisheries, and 31,023 tons in foreign commerce; and of the enrolled and licensed shipping, 5,249 tons were employed in the cod fisheries, and 571 tons in the mackerel fisheries; the remaining enrolled, etc., shipping being employed in the coasting trade. The fisheries are carried on from the ports of New London and Stonington. The steam marine of the State, all of which is employed in coasting, amounted to 8,455 tons. The shipping built in the year was 3 ships, 7 brigs, 27 schooners, 9 sloops, and 1 steamer—in all, 4,519 tons. The following table will exhibit the movement of foreign commerce in the State from 1791 to 1850:

Internal Communication.—The lines of travel and transportation in Connecticut extend—east and west directly through the length of the State, having their termini at New York and at Boston, and—north and south, stretching from the ports on Long Island Sound, across the country into Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, and ultimately to the Western States, and also into Canada. The connections thus formed extend several thousands of miles, and afford easy and expeditious routes of communication between the interior and sea-board. There are two lines of railroad running in a direction east and west—the line composed of the New York and New Haven R. R., and the New Haven and New London R. R., which, in connection with the Stonington R. R., and also with the Norwich and Worcester R. R., forms the Southern route between the two commercial centres, Boston and New York; and the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill R. R., which will form a direct line through the middle section of the State, from Providence, R. I., to Fishkill on the Hudson River, opposite the east terminus of the Erie R. R. The lines running north from the Sound ports are—the Norwich and Worcester R. R.; the New London, Willimantic, and Palmer R. R.; the New Haven, Hartford, and Springfield R. R.; the New Haven and Northampton R. R. (on the old canal route); the Naugatuck R. R.; the Housatonic R. R., and the Danbury and Norwalk R. R. There are also several additional railroads in progress or projected; one of which, and the most important, is that designed to effect an air line route between New York and Boston. The common and turnpike roads of the State are proverbially good and well kept. The only canal of any length the State ever possessed, the Farmington Canal, has been filled in, and now forms the bed of the New Haven and Northampton R. R.

Banks, etc.—In April, 1850, there were in the State 41 banks and 2 branch banks, the condition of which at that date was as follows: Liabilities—capital, $9,907,503; circulation, $5,253,884; deposits, $2,357,939; due other banks, $463,763; dividends unpaid, $37,372; surplus fund, $753,654; earnings since dividend, $304,396, and other liabilities, $38,961; and Assets—loans and discounts, $15,607,315; real estate, $389,953; other investments, $396,035; due by other banks and brokers, $1,637,411; notes of the banks, $245,349; specie funds, $103,614; specie, $640,622, and expenses since dividend, $51,873. Total of balance sheet, $19,122,207. Connecticut had also 15 savings' banks, in which $4,746,692 was deposited by 32,966 individual depositors: the sums deposited in 1849-50 amounted to $1,051,300, and the sums withdrawn to $719,598. The aggregate expense of managing these institutions was $10,537, and the dividends made on sums deposited ranged from 5 to 7½ per centum. The securities on which the credits are based are loans on real and personal estate and stocks, and investments in bank stocks and bonds, etc. The Insurance Companies in the State comprised—3 general stock companies, with an aggregate of capitals amounting to $1,400,000; 11 mutual general companies—capitals, $1,437,025; 6 life mutual companies—capitals, $1,400,000; 2 health companies—capitals, $203,175; and 1 life and health company—capital, $100,000.

Government.—The charter granted in 1662, by Charles II., formed the basis of the government until 1813, when the present constitution was formed.

Every white male citizen of the United States, 21 years of age, who has gained a settlement in the State, has resided six months in his town, is possessed of a freehold of $7 a year in value, or has done military duty for one year, or has been excused therefrom, or has paid a State tax within the year, and who has a good moral character, may vote at all elections on taking the oath. Every voter is eligible to any office, unless it be expressly excepted. The general election is held on the first Monday of April annually.

The legislature, styled the General Assembly, consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The Senate is not to consist of less than 18 nor more than 28 members—senators are chosen by districts of equal population, and by a plurality of votes, and in case any two candidates have an equal and highest vote, then the House of Representatives shall elect one of them. Representatives are chosen by towns, and in the same manner as senators; but in case of no candidate receiving a highest vote, the Senate chooses one as member from the two candidates having the highest. The legislature meets alternately at Hartford and New Haven, on the first Monday in May, yearly.

The Governor exercises the chief executive power. He must be at least 30 years of age and have been elected by a majority of votes, and in case there be no choice by the people, one of the two candidates having the highest vote is chosen by the General Assembly on joint ballot. The Governor has power to grant reprieves, except in cases of impeachment, but not pardons; and he may veto a bill, but a majority of both houses may pass it again, and it becomes law nevertheless. A Lieutenant-Governor (ex-officio President of Senate), Secretary of State, Treasurer, and Comptroller are chosen in the same manner as the Governor. All these officers are elected annually.

Connecticut, under the law relative to the distribution of representatives, has four members in Congress.

The Judiciary of the State consists of a Supreme Court, a Superior Court, County Courts, etc. The Supreme Court consists of a chief and four associate justices, and meets annually in each county. The Superior Court is held by one judge of the Superior Court semi-annually in each county. County Courts are held three times each year in the several counties by a judge elected annually by the legislature. Appeal lies from the County Courts to the Superior Court. Clerks of the County Courts are likewise clerks of the Superior Court and Supreme Court in their counties respectively. In all cases of libel, truth may be given in evidence. Sheriffs are chosen by the Assembly, and hold office for three years.

Finances, etc.—During the year ending 1st April, 1850, the total receipts into the public treasury amounted to $122,347, and the expenditures to $118,392, leaving a balance of $3,955. The chief sources of income were, from taxes, $73,557; from dividends on bank stock, $37,053, etc. The principal expenses were, the expenses of legislation, $25,986; salaries, $14,150; contingent expenses of government, $15,399; judicial expenses, $49,002, etc. Connecticut has no absolute debt. The contingent debt amounted to $58,212. The value of property belonging to the State otherwise than the School Fund, amounts to $406,000.

Religious Denominations.—The statistics of the principal religious denominations, according to the returns made by each in 1850, were as follows: The Congregationalists had 267 churches, 206 ministers, and 35,153 communicants; the Baptists had 111 churches, 89 ministers, and 16,230 communicants; the Protestant Episcopalians had a bishop, and 106 ministers, and 9,360 communicants; the Episcopal Methodists had 143 ministers, and the other Methodist churches 8 ministers; the Presbyterians, 5 ministers; the Unitarians, 4 ministers; the Roman Catholics, a bishop and 9 priests; the Universalists, 14 preachers; the Second Advent Church, 8 ministers; the Christians, par excellence, 5 ministers; the Free-Will Baptists, 1 minister; the Jews had 2 synagogues and 1 rabbi.

Educational Statistics.—The number of common school societies in the State on the 1st April, 1850, was 217; of school districts, 1,649, and of children between 4 and 16 years of age, 92,055. The value of the School Fund, 2d Sept., as appears from the biennial exhibit, was $2,076,602 75; and the amount of dividend for 1850 was $137,449 51, or $1 50 for every enumerated child. The returns do not give the number of teachers, or their wages, or the time during which schools are open, but only the information above indicated. The Legislature, at the session of 1849, appropriated $10,000 for the establishment of a State Normal School, which is under the control of eight trustees, appointed by the General Assembly, one from each county. The collegiate establishments of the State are: Yale College, Trinity College, the Wesleyan University, and the Theological Institute. Yale College is one of the oldest, most richly endowed, and most extensively useful institutions of learning in the United States. It was founded in 1701 by the gentleman whose name it perpetuates. In 1850 it had in the academical department 432 students, of which 93 were of the senior class, 91 of the junior class, 122 of the sophomore class, and 126 of the freshman class—total, 432; and the number of students in theology was 38, in law 26, in medicine 38, and in philosophy and the arts 21—total in professions and the arts, 123. Grand total, 555. From 1702 to 1850, the number of graduates had been 5,932, of which 2,902 were living; and of the total 1,562 had been ministers of the gospel, of whom 724 were living in 1850. The library of Yale College contains 49,000 volumes. Trinity College, an Episcopal institution, is located at Hartford. It was founded in 1824, and in 1850 had 9 professors, 66 students, and a library of 9,000 volumes. Its alumni counted at the latter date 257, of which 117 had taken holy orders. The Wesleyan University, at Middletown, was founded in 1831, and in 1850 had 8 professors, 125 students, and a library of 11,123 volumes. Since its commencement it had graduated 327 students, and of these 126 had gone into the ministry. At Hartford is the Theological Institution of Connecticut, an establishment under the Congregational churches, founded in 1834. It had, in 1850, 3 instructors, 17 students, and a library of 5,000 volumes. Its alumni counted 151. There are, besides the above, a large number of academies, and other descriptions of private schools, which, for efficiency and cheapness, have few equals. There is also at Hartford the Connecticut Historical Society, which publishes its transactions at stated periods.

Charitable Institutions.—Connecticut, at an earlier period, and on a more extensive scale than any other of the States, commenced and completed institutions the object of which was the relief of those whom nature or accident had deprived of the use of senses or mental faculties. The principal of these institutions are the Retreat for the Insane, and the American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, both at Hartford; and to these may be added the State Prison at Wethersfield, conducted on paternal and correctional, rather than vindictive, principles. The Retreat for the Insane was opened in 1824; on the 1st April, 1849, it contained 133 patients, and in 1849-50, 135 were admitted, making 263 in all; and during the same year 125 were discharged, leaving in the retreat 143. Of the patients discharged 64 were recovered, 24 improved, 7 not improved, and 30 died. The whole number of admissions, from the opening of the institution, had been 2,033. The terms of admission are $39 a quarter for patients belonging to the State, and $45 50 for patients from other States. The American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb was the first institution of the kind founded in the United States, and has been well endowed by individual, State, and Federal bounties. The number of students for the year ending 1st May, 1850, was 210, and of these 20 were supported by friends, 32 by the State of Maine, 23 by New Hampshire, 19 by Vermont, 75 by Massachusetts, 7 by Rhode Island, 26 by Connecticut, and 8 by South Carolina. The annual cost is $100, but in sickness extra necessaries are charged for; applicants for admission must be between 8 and 25 years of age, of good natural intellect, capable of forming and joining letters legibly and correctly, and of good moral character. During the year ending 31st March, 1850, there were discharged from the State Prison 43 convicts, and received 61; and at that date there remained in confinement 175, of which 163 were males and 12 females. The males are employed in making cabinet work, cutlery, and shoes; and the females in washing, cooking, making and mending clothing, and binding boots and shoes. The average number in confinement during the year was 160. A small library has been purchased for the use of the prisoners, and it is a duty of the chaplain to give educational as well as religious instruction to the inmates. The institution is self-supporting, and the receipts for the year past show a balance in favor of the prison. A Reform School for Juvenile Offenders has also been lately established by the Legislature and individuals conjointly.

Periodical Press.—The whole number of periodicals and newspapers published in Connecticut, in 1850, was 51, of which 30 were political, and 21 literary, religious, scientific, etc. Of the political papers, 20 were Whig and 10 Democratic in their teachings. Of the total, 8 were daily papers, 4 tri-weekly, 33 weekly, and 6 at other periods. The circulation of the daily papers amounted at each aggregate issue to 12,300 copies; of the tri-weeklies, to 1,600 copies; of the weeklies, to 34,510 copies; and of all others, to 2,400 copies. The best known of the Connecticut periodicals, are—the “American Journal of Science,” the “New Englander” (literary), the “Church Review” (religious), and the “Yale Literary Magazine” (literary): a 1 of which are published from the New Haven press. The “Journal of Science” is under the editorial supervision of the celebrated Dr. Silliman, and has long stood at the head of scientific periodicals in America.

Connecticut consisted originally of two colonies: Hartford, settled by emigrants from Massachusetts in 1635, and New Haven, by emigrants from England in 1638. The two colonies were united under one government by a charter of Charles II. in 1662. In 1686 this charter was suspended by James II., and Andros, who had been appointed Governor of New England, was sent to assume the government. Repairing to Hartford, with a body of troops, he demanded the charter; the instrument was accordingly brought into the hall in the evening, with the intention of its being surrendered, but the lights were suddenly extinguished, and the charter was carried off and secreted by some of the colonists in the hollow of a tree, which is still in existence, and is to this day known as the Charter Oak. When Andros was deposed in 1689, the charter was resumed, and the government was administered under it until 1818, when the present constitution was formed and went into effect. Its principal provisions are referred to under another caption.

HARTFORD and NEW HAVEN are alternate capitals of the State.

CONNECTICUT river: this r. has its sources in N. Hamp., and the mountainous tracts of Lower Canada. Its general course is from N. to S., and it is navigable for vessels of considerable burden for a distance of 50 m. to Hartford, and to Middletown, about 30 m. from the sea, for vessels of 12 feet draft. It is the Quonektaut of the Indians, said to signify “Long River,” or, as it is rendered by others, the “River of Pines.” Its western branch forms the boundary line between the United States and Canada; and the main river, dividing Vermont and New Hampshire, crosses the western part of Massachusetts, passes through the central part of Connecticut, and after a fall of about 1,600 feet in its whole length of 410 miles, enters Long Island Sound in 41° 16' N. lat. In its course it passes through a beautiful country, and by many very flourishing towns, among which may be mentioned Hanover, Haverhill, Walpole, and Charlestown, in New Hampshire; Windsor, Newbury, and Brattleboro', in Vermont; Greenfield, Hadley, Northampton, and Springfield, in Massachusetts; and Hartford, Middletown, and Haddam, etc., in Connecticut. Its breadth, at the entrance into Vermont, is about 150 feet, but in its course of 60 miles it increases to a breadth of about 400 feet. In Connecticut and Massachusetts, its breadth varies from 500 to 1,100 feet. The canals and other improvements recently made to overcome the rapids and falls, have rendered it navigable for small boats which trade as far as Well's r., at a distance of 250 m. above Hartford. The falls of most celebrity are Bellow's Falls, Queechy Falls, White River Falls, etc., in New Hampshire and Vermont; Montague and South Hadley Falls, in Massachusetts; and Enfield Falls, in Connecticut, at the last of which it meets tide water. The descent of the river, between Hanover, New Hampshire, and Enfield, Connecticut, is about 370 feet, of which 225 feet have been overcome by locks.

The principal tributaries of this river are, in New Hampshire, the Upper and Lower Ammonoosuc, Sugar, and Ashuelot rivers; in Vermont, Pasumpsic, Wells, White, Queechey, Black, Williams, and West rivers; in Massachusetts, Miller's, Deerfield, Chicopee, and Westfield rivers; and in Connecticut, Farmington r. The banks of the Connecticut are in many places rough and precipitous, but there are other portions on both sides, extending from half a mile to 5 miles wide, and but slightly raised above the surface of the stream, which are annually overflowed, and consequently enriched, the soil of which is very fertile, and forms a large tract of meadow-land. From the beauty, utility, and length of this river, and also from its connection with the different towns and villages which lie on its banks, it forms one of the most distinguished features of New England. Large quantities of shad, of a superior quality, are taken annually, also some other fish; but the salmon, which formerly frequented it, have now disappeared.

CREEK AGENCY, p. o., Creek Nation, Ind. Ter.: at the confluence of Verdigris r. with the Arkansas r., 3 or 4 m. W. of Fort Gibson on the Neosho r., 192 m. W. N. W. Little Rock.

CREEK NATION, Ind. Ter. The Creeks occupy a large territory between that of the Cherokees, to the N. and E., and that of the Choctaws, on the S., extending W. to the 100th meridian. The Canadian r. separates the Creeks from the Choctaws, and the surface is chiefly drained by its N. fork, and by the Red or Pawnee fork of the Arkansas r. The soils are fertile, and large crops of the agricultural staples usual to the latitude are annually raised. Fort Gibson is supplied with provisions by the industry of this nation. They have large stocks of cattle and hogs, and are otherwise well provided. Their government is based on a written constitution; they select their own chief and representatives, the latter acting as the grand council of the nation. They have also a judiciary, observing all the legal forms of civilized nations, and in their schools and churches are not surpassed by the neighboring State of Arkansas. The missionaries have effected such improvements in their condition, indeed, that the civilization of the descendants of the present generation is secured, and by the aid of the mechanics and farmers, supplied to them by the General Government, they are taught the substantial industries needed in the State. On the whole, however, this nation is not so far advanced as either the Cherokees or Choctaws—a fact which may be attributed to physical disabilities rather than to an inferior moral influence on the part of those charged with their welfare. Their country is not so well watered as that of either of the nations mentioned; nor are the incentives to industry, from their remote position from navigable channels, so great. The droughts of summer, and the piercing cold of the winter, are also drawbacks by which their interests suffer. The Seminoles are considered as a constituent part of the Creek Nation, and as such, inhabit the country between the forks of the Canadian r. The Seminoles are more averse to labor than any other of the immigrant tribes, and hold slaves which they brought with them from Florida. So satisfied, however, are they with the country allotted them, that they are making strenuous endeavors to persuade the remnant of their tribe still in Florida to settle among them; and their endeavors have not been in vain, as, by a recent agreement with the chiefs who lately visited the seat of government to pay their respects to the President, they will remove forthwith. It is supposed that 300 of the nation still reside in the fastnesses of the Florida peninsula. The number in the west of the Mississippi is estimated at 24,000.

- CROTON LANDING, p. v., Westchester co., N. Y.: on the N. side of Croton r., near its entrance into Tappan Bay. The Hudson River R. R. passes the v. 36 m. from New York, and 114 from Albany; and steamboats make regular stoppings here. It is a small but pleasant village.

CROTON river, N. Y.: a fine stream, rising in Dutchess and Putnam counties, flowing in a S. and S. W. direction through a part of Westchester co., and emptying into the Hudson r., about 2 m. above the v. of Sing Sing. Its length is about 45 m. It takes its rise in several small lakes; its waters are very pure, and have for several years been directed through an aqueduct to New York, supplying that city with an abundance of water. The works built for the purpose of conducting the water, are among the most extensive in the world.

quantities of tobacco. Farms 338; manuf. 9; dwell. 640, and pop.—wh. 3,083, fr. col. 839, sl. 6,329—total 9,751. Capital: Cumberland C. H.

CUMBERLAND, p. v., and cap. Allegheny co., Md.: on the N. bank of the Potomac r., at the mouth of Willis' cr., 146 m. W. N. W. Annapolis, and by R. R. from Baltimore, 179 m. It is the centre of the vast mining region of Allegheny county, and an entrepôt on the great line of travel from the Atlantic to the Western States. The Baltimore and Ohio R. R. passes through it, and here commences the great National Road leading to the Mississippi river. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal also terminates here. Besides these great works of internal improvement, there are diverging from Cumberland several lines of railroads connecting with the various mines of the Cumberland Coal and Iron Companies. The village contains a court-house, the county prison, a market-house, two banks, and several fine buildings, workshops, etc., connected with the public works; also, several handsome church edifices. Three newspapers are published here weekly, the "C. Civilian" (whig), the "Alleghanian" (dem.), and the "Unionist" (neutral)—each circulating from 400 to 500 copies of each issue. In 1850, the population of Cumberland was 6,067, of which 5,576 were white persons, 267 free colored persons, and 224 slaves, and hence it is the second town of Maryland in respect of population. In 1840, the population was only 2,425, the increase in the subsequent decade having been 149.8 per centum. The coal of this region is semi-bituminous, of excellent quality, and suitable for ocean steamships and a variety of other purposes to which the anthracite has hitherto been applied; it is brought to the markets of the East on the railroad and canal to Baltimore, and thence is tugged through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, and the Delaware and Raritan Canal, to the harbor of New York. The quantity of this mineral delivered in Baltimore in 1850 was 146,645 tons, and about 80,000 tons were deposited at Alexandria. The delivery at Baltimore in 1845 was only 16,000 tons; in 1846, 18,393 tons; in 1847, 50,259 tons; 1848, 66,289 tons; in 1849, 71,699 tons; and in 1850, as above related. In 1851, the delivery amounted to 163,555 tons, and is now increasing in a rapid ratio. The Coal Company have loaned money to the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. to furnish increased means of transportation, the want of which has alone been the cause of limiting the deposits. Cumberland coal contains 77 parts of carbon, 16 parts of volatile matter, and 7 parts of ashes. The Cumberland Coal and Iron Company is an amalgamation of the several companies before existing in that vicinity under various names: it was organized by the legislature of the State in 1852; and now holds about 12,000 acres of mineral lands, and has a working capital of about $5,000,000.

CUMBERLAND river, Ky. and Tenn.: a large river, the sources of which are found in the Cumberland Mountains, interlocking with those of Clinch and Kentucky rivers. It flows through Kentucky westwardly about 200 miles, enters the State of Tennessee, and meandering 120 miles, again enters Kentucky, through which its course is north-west to the Ohio river, into which it falls 11½ miles above the mouth of the Tennessee river, and 60 miles above the mouth of the Ohio river. Its entire length is about 600 miles, and it drains a territory equal to about 17,500 square miles; it is navigable for large steamboats and vessels to Nashville, 203 miles, and for boats of 15 tons 300 miles. At certain seasons of high water vessels of 400 tons may be brought down the river 400 miles to the Ohio; and for half its length boats may navigate it at all seasons. The elevation of its sources are probably 1,200 feet above the level of the mouth of the river; it is the second river in size that falls into the Ohio, being inferior only to the Tennessee. Below Nashville, which lies on its south bank, the river is deep and narrow.

CUYAHOGA county, Ohio. Situate N. E. on Lake Erie, and contains 456 sq. m. Drained chiefly by Cuyahoga and Rocky rivers, which empty into the lake, and afford large water-power. Surface level, declining toward the N. Soils everywhere of the highest fertility, producing the grains in abundance and grasses of the most nutritious quality. The climate is delightful. Farms 2,228; manuf. 162; dwell. 8,289, and pop.—wh. 47,745, fr. col. 354—total 48,099. Capital: Cleveland. Public Works: Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula R. R.; Cleveland and Pittsburg R. R.; Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R.; Cleveland and Sandusky R. R., etc., and the Ohio Canal.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, p. v., Summit co., Ohio: on the Cuyahoga r., at the falls, 109 m. N. E. Columbus. The r. here has its greatest bend toward the S., and passes through a deep channel in the rocks, and by successive leaps falls in a short distance 240 feet, creating a great water-power. A considerable manufacturing village has here sprung up, the destiny of which is as yet only foreshadowed. The Pennsylvania and Ohio Canal passes through the place, and the Akron Branch R. R., uniting with the Cleveland and Pittsburg R. R. at Hudson, connects it with those two important commercial centres. Pop. about 3,000. In the neighborhood bituminous coal is abundant, and is mined to a large extent.

CUYAHOGA river, Ohio: one of the most important rivers in northern Ohio. It rises in Geauga county, and runs southwardly through Portage county, where it gradually curves and courses through Summit and Cuyahoga counties, in a direction N. N. W. to Lake Erie, into which it falls at Cleveland. It is more than 60 miles long; it has numerous falls, and from its not being materially affected in its supply of water in the dry season, is exceedingly well adapted for mill and factory purposes. Along its banks several flourishing manufacturing villages have already sprung up, and there is every prospect of its becoming the focus of an immense manufacturing interest. The village at the great falls is destined to be a second Paterson or Lowell. The Ohio Canal runs along the valley of this stream about 35 miles to near Akron, and crosses it by an aqueduct at Boston, 23 miles S. of Cleveland. The mouth of the river, which has been improved and extended by piers, forms the harbor of Cleveland.

DACUSVILLE, p. v., Pickens dist., S. Car.: 118 m. W. N. W. Columbia.

DADE county, Flor. Situate S., and contains about 3,840 sq. m. The drainage is very imperfect, and, except along the shores, the whole is a swamp. The Pay-hai-o-kee, or Everglades, is almost entirely within this county. These consist of an extensive grass meadow, covered from one to six feet deep with water, interspersed all over with islands of rich land and cypress swamps. These islands were safe retreats for the Seminoles during the war. The swamps are the abodes of alligators, serpents, and vermin of all kinds. The only really valuable land lies on the coast, and numerous small islands and keys, with which it is lined. Farms 6; manuf. 2; dwell. 23, and pop.—wh. 147, fr. col. 1, sl. 11—total 159. Capital: Miami.

DADE county, Ga. Situate N. W., and contains 240 sq. m. Drained chiefly by Lookout cr. of the Tennessee r. Surface mountainous, with fertile valleys. Crops various, including Indian corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, etc., but none in such preponderating quantity as to mark it as a principal staple. Farms 235; manuf. 4; dwell. 421, and pop.—wh. 2,532, fr. col. 0, sl. 143—total 2,680. Capital: Trenton. Public Works: Chattanooga and Nashville R. R.

DADE county, Mo. Situate S. W., and contains 504 sq. m. Drained by Sac r. and its tributaries. Surface undulating. Soils fertile. Farms 567; manuf. 13; dwell. 659, and pop.—wh. 8,976, fr. col. 1, sl. 269—total 4,246. Capital: Greenfield.

DADEVILLE, p. v., and cap. Tallapoosa co., Ala.: 45 m. N. E. Montgomery, on a highland N. of Sandy cr., a tributary of Tallapoosa r., from which latter it is distant E. about 8 m. It contains the usual co. buildings, and about 180 inhabitants.

DAVIE county, N. Car. Situate centrally, and contains 180 sq. m. Drained wholly by creeks of Yadkin r., which lies on its E. border. Surface undulating. Soils fertile, producing cotton, tobacco, and the grains generally. Farms 404; manuf. 37; dwell. 1,027, and pop.—wh. 5,613, fr. col. 82, sl. 2,171—total 7,866. Capital: Mocksville.

DAVISS county, Ind. Situate S. W., and contains 420 sq. m. The forks of White r. form its boundaries W. and S., and their many tributaries spread over every part of the county. In the N. E. the surface is rolling and heavily timbered; the N. W. level, and interspersed with prairies and skirts of timber; the centre barrens, and the S. and E. undulating and heavily timbered. The soils are various, from sandy to pure clay. The bottoms of White r. are a rich black loam. Farms 1,221; manuf. 11; dwell. 1,503, and pop.—wh. 10,308, fr. col. 44—total 10,352. Capital:

Washington. Public Works: Cincinnati and St. Louis R. R.; and Wabash and Erie Canal.

DAVNESS county, Ky. Situate N. W., and contains 400 sq. m. Drained by creeks flowing N. into the Ohio r., which forms the boundary in that direction, and by creeks flowing S. into Green r., which bounds the county S. Surface uneven. Soils ordinarily fertile, and producing the cereals, tobacco, etc., in abundance. Farms 1,057; manuf. 18; dwell. 1,631, and pop.—wh. 9,423, fr. col. 50, sl. 2,580—total 12,353. Capital: Owensburgh.

DAVIES county, Mo. Situate N. W., and contains 576 sq. m. Drained by Grand r. and its numerous and wide-spreading tributaries. Surface chiefly undulating prairie; and the soils everywhere fertile and productive. Indian corn and tobacco are largely grown—the other cereals to a less amount. Farms 342; manuf. 3; dwell. 784, and pop.—wh. 5,056, fr. col. 1, sl. 241—total 5,298. Capital: Gallatin.

DAVIS county, Ia. Situate S. on the Missouri line, and contains 504 sq. m. Drained in the N. by Soap and Chequest creeks of Des Moines r., and in the S. by the head waters of Fox, Wyaconda, North Fabius, and other rivers flowing into the Mississippi. The surface is beautifully diversified, chiefly undulating prairie, with frequent groves of timber. Soils of unsurpassed fertility. Farms 613; manuf. 11; dwell. 1,180, and pop.—wh. 7,257, fr. col. 7—total 7,264. Capital: Bloomfield.

DAVIS county, Utah Ter. Situate N. middle, and contains about 1,800 sq. m. Drained by Weber r., the river Jordan, and other streams falling into the Great Salt Lake, which forms its W. boundary. Surface hilly, with fertile valleys. Bear River mountains spread over its eastern sections. As a farming county it has excellent facilities. Farms 112; manuf. 1; dwell. 215, and pop.—wh. 1,134, fr. col. 0—total 1,134. Capital: Farmington.

DAYTON, t., p. city, and cap. Montgomery co., Ohio: at the confluence of the Mad and Miami rivers, in lat. 39° 44' N., and long. 84° 11' W., 66 m. W. S. W. Columbus. It is one of those new centres of trade and commerce which have sprung up in the Great West with the progress of internal improvements, and which, during the decade ending with 1850, have been so wonderfully developed. The ground on which the city is built was originally purchased by John Cleve Symmes about the year 1795, and afterward it appears that Governor St. Clair and Jonathan Dayton, with several associates, contracted with Symmes for the purchase and settlement of so much of the original purchase as was included in the corporate limits of the present city. The embryo town received the name of Dayton. Symmes being unable to meet his payments, the land reverted to the government, and afterward (in 1793), Daniel C. Cooper, of New Jersey, succeeded to the proprietorship. The town was then laid out upon a plan originally furnished by St. Clair with streets 100 feet wide, crossing each other at right angles. The town plot was divided into 250 lots, 100 feet front by 200 feet in depth; and upward of 50 out-lots of 10 acres each were laid off at the same time. But it was not till within the present century that the town had a tangible existence. In 1805 it was incorporated by the Legislature, and in 1806 the first brick dwelling was erected; and in 1810 it had only 383 inhabitants. Its progress, indeed, seems to have been quite slow until the completion of the internal improvements connecting it with the commercial centres of the West were completed. In 1820 the inhabitants numbered 1,039; in 1830, 2,954; in 1840, 6,067; and in 1850, 10,977. In 1829 the Miami Canal, between Cincinnati and Dayton, was completed, and on the 25th January of that year a canal boat traversed the distance (60 miles) between the two places. From this date the prosperity of Dayton commences. At a later period the canal was opened to Lake Erie. The amount of tolls collected at the port of Dayton, in 1841, was $27,058; in 1850, $32,576. There are also now upward of 250 miles of M'Adam roads radiating from the city in all directions; and it is now connected, through the following railroads, with all the principal points of the Union: the Mad River and Erie R. R., 156 m., terminating at Sandusky; the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton R. R., 60 m., terminating at Cincinnati; the Little Miami R. R., 84 m., at Springfield; the Dayton and Western R. R., 40 m., at the State line; the Greenville and Miami R. R., 36 m., at Greenville and Union; the Dayton and Michigan R. R., 140 m., at Toledo; and the Dayton and Xenia, 16 m., at Xenia. These connect with lines reaching the length and breadth of the United States; and a continuous line of railroad is under contract from a point on the Ohio r., connecting with the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. to Ilinoistown, opposite St. Louis. The principal points on this road will be Columbus, Dayton, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, and St. Louis. The commerce on all the completed railroads is immense, but there is no immediate means of ascertaining its tonnage, description, or value. The commerce of Dayton by canal, was in 1850, as exhibited in the following table, which gives the amount of the principal articles received and shipped at the port in the year referred to.

The several locks of the canal afford considerable motive power within the limits of the city; and in 1845 the Dayton Hydraulic Company constructed a hydraulic canal from a point at Mad r., 4 m. above the city, by means of which the waters of a large and unfailing stream are brought through the place, the surplus water being discharged into the canal, and thence into the Miami r., below the city. The whole of the power thus obtained is leased to manufacturers, and this addition of motive force is justly ranked as one of the chief sources of the prosperity now enjoyed by the city. A further increase of hydraulic facilities is projected by conducting the waters of the Miami above the city, through a canal, and discharging them into the same river below. Dayton surpasses all other western cities of its size in the variety and extent of its manufactures. Among the most notable and extensive are those for the manufacture of railroad cars on the largest scale; paper mills, which supply no small part of the West with wrapping, news, and book paper; foundries for stoves, hollow ware, etc., the annual value of these branches alone being at least $50,000. There is no city in the West so largely engaged in the manufacture and export of linseed oil and oil-cake as Dayton. In 1850, 134,000 bushels of seed, valued at $163,245, produced 294,500 gallons of oil, worth at 72 c. per gallon, $212,040; and 5,650 tons of oil-cake, worth at $10 per ton, $26,800, the difference between the raw seed and manufactured articles being $75,492, which represents the gross earnings of labor and capital employed. The amount of superfine flour manufactured annually in the city is equal to 125,000 barrels.

There are three chartered banks in the city: one a branch of the State Bank, one an independent bank, and one a free bank under the new law. The aggregate capital of these is $350,000. Besides these, there are several private banks, which employ capital amounting to $20,000, making the banking capital of the place $550,000, a sum inadequate to the increasing wants of the manufacturing and commercial interests of the community.

The charter for a city government was granted by the Legislature in 1841. The city, for municipal purposes, is divided into six wards; and its affairs are managed by 12 councilmen, representing the several wards in a single body. The present revenue of the city from taxes, licenses, etc., amounts to $20,000, one-third of which is devoted to educational purposes. The public buildings, though neither so costly nor so perfect in architectural detail as those of the old and wealthy cities of the country, are neat and substantial. The Court House is one of the most elegant in the valley of the Ohio; its dimensions are 127 feet in length by 62 feet in breadth. It is built of hewn blocks of coarse but compact white marble, which abounds in the vicinity—the roof is of stone and the doors of solid iron, and the style of architecture that of the Parthenon, with slight improvements. The plan seems to be faultless, and the effect of the building imposing: its whole cost exceeded somewhat $100,000. The streets of the city are lighted with gas, supplied by a company chartered for that purpose, as are the public buildings, and, as a general thing, also the stores. The gas is made from the bituminous coal found about the head waters of the Ohio, and affords a cheap and excellent light. Coke and tar are also obtained from the coal used in supplying the works.

There are two market-houses in the city. The principal one is 400 feet long, and paved with blocks of limestone; and a part of the second story of the building is occupied as a City Hall and Council Chamber. The markets exhibit the overflowing abundance of the valley, and prices are here about 20 per cent. below those of Cincinnati, and 40 or 50 per cent. below those of Boston and New York. As the population of the city increases, however, this disproportion in prices will, of course, be less.

Besides an excellent female academy and several private schools, there are six free schools in the city, which are conducted in the most admirable manner. Five of these are "common schools;" the sixth is called the "High School," a popular college, into which the pupils from the other schools are admitted, when they have attained a prescribed advancement in the usual English studies, and sustain a good character. The principal literary institution is the Library Association, which has laid the foundation of a valuable library, having now upward of 2,000 volumes of selected works. The library is open to minors, under certain restrictions; and a course of lectures is usually delivered before the Association during the winter months, which is free to the citizens generally.

The periodical press of Dayton consists of four daily newspapers (all issuing likewise weekly editions), and one weekly paper: the dailies are, the "Western Empire" (whig), the "Transcript" (neutral), the "D. Journal" (dem.), and the "D. Gazette" (whig); and the weekly newspaper is the "D. Advertiser" (whig). In point of energy and talent, the Dayton press is not surpassed by the press of older and more wealthy cities.

DECATUR COUNTY, Ind. Situate S. E., and contains 880 sq. m. Drained by Flat Rock, Clifty, and Sand creeks. Surface mostly level or undulating—on the streams somewhat hilly. The bottoms are rich, though small. In the E. and S. there is some flat, wetland. Farms 1,377; manuf. 89; dwell. 2,662, and pop.—wh. 14,951, fr. col. 156—total 15,107. Capital: Greensburg. Public Works: Lawrenceburg and Upper Mississippi R. R.

DECATUR COUNTY, Ta. Situate S. on Missouri line, and contains 540 sq. m. Drained by the head waters of Welden r., and Crooked Fork of Grand r., which traverse the co. from N. to S. Surface elevated and beautifully diversified, and the soils eminently fertile. Numerous Hungarians are settled at New Buda, in this county. Farms 46; manuf. 0; dwell. 145, and pop.—wh. 964, fr. col. 1—total 965. Capital: Nine Eagles.

DECATUR COUNTY, Tenn. Situate centrally on the W. side of Tennessee r., and contains 320 sq. m. Drained by creeks of Tennessee r. Surface generally level or undulating, and soils good, producing largely of corn, wheat, etc., with some tobacco. Farms 443; manuf. 15; dwell. 941, and pop.—white 5,263, free col. 17, slave 723—total 6,003. Capital: Decaturville.

DECATUR, p. v., Morgan co., Ala.: on the S. bank of Tennessee r., 146 m. N. by W. Montgomery. The Tusculumbia and Decatur R. R. has its E. terminus at this point; but this R. R. now forms a link in the great Memphis and Charleston Route. The v. has considerable trade, and has a weekly newspaper, called the "Morgan Advertiser." Pop. about 700.

DECATUR, p. v., and cap. De Kalb co., Ga.: on the line of the Georgia R. R., 165 m. from Augusta, and 6 from Atlanta, 82 m. W. N. W. Milledgeville. It is pleasantly located in a fine hilly region, and is a v. of considerable pretensions. Pop. 744.

DECATUR, p. v., and cap. Macon co., Ill.: on the N. W. side of the N. fork of Sangamon r., 39 m. E. by N. Springfield. It is situate on the edge of an extensive prairie, and in the midst of a fine agricultural region. It is one of the most thriving of the inland towns of the State; and its future, when the Central R. R. and other railroads intended to intersect it are finished, will be one of great prosperity. Its inhabitants number some 600, and the immediate vicinity is thickly settled.

DECATUR, p. v., and cap. Adams co., Ind.: on the W. side of St. Mary's r. of the Maumee, 96 m. N. E. Indianapolis. It contains a C. H., jail, and the co. offices, about 120 dwellings, and 231 inhabitants. It has a weekly newspaper, the "D. Gazette" (whig).

DECATUR, t. and p. o., Van Buren co., Mich.: on the S. Branch of Pawpaw r., 80 m. W. by S. Lansing. Pop. 386.

DECATUR, p. v., and cap. Newton co., Miss.: at the head streams of Chickasawha river, 64 m. E. by N. Jackson.

DECATUR, t. and p. v., Otsego co., N. Y.: 46 m. W. Albany. Drained by Elk and other small streams. Surface elevated and hilly. Soil a sandy loam. The v. contains 28 dwellings and 200 inhabitants. Pop. of t. 927.

DECATUR, p. v., Brown co., Ohio: between the forks of Eagle cr., 84 m. S. W. Columbus. It is a thriving v., and has several flour, grist, and saw-mills on the neighboring streams. Pop. 171.

DECATUR, p. v., and cap. Meigs co., Tenn.: about 2 m. S. E. of Tennessee r., and 117 E. S. E. Nashville. It contains the co. offices and about 180 inhabitants.

DECATUR, t. and p. o., Mifflin co., Penn.: in the mountains, 42 m. N. W. Harrisburg, and watered by Jack's cr. of the Juniata r. It is 14 m. N. E. of Lewistown.

DECATUR, t. and p. v., Greene co., Wisc.: 32 m. S. Madison. The v. lies on the W. side of Sugar r., a branch of Rock river. Pop. of t. 558.

DECATURVILLE, p. v., and cap. Decatur co., Tenn.: 82 m. S. E. Nashville.

DECATURVILLE, p. v., Washington co., Ohio: 78 m. S. E. Columbus.

DECKER'S CREEK, p. o. Preston co., Virg.: on a cr. of Cheat r. so called, 188 m. N. W. Richmond.

DECKERTOWN, p. o., Sussex co., N. Jer.: on the W. side of Wallkill r., 69 m. N. Trenton. It has several stores, and about 160 inhabitants. The neighborhood is a fine limestone country.

DECORAH, p. o., Winneshiek co., Ia.: 113 m. N. by W. Iowa City.

DEPHAM, t., p. v., and cap. Norfolk co., Mass.: on Charles r., 13 m. S. S. W. Boston. Neponset r. runs on its E. border, and a small stream runs from Charles r. into Neponset r.—these afford good water-power. The whole t. is well cultivated. The v. is pleasantly situated on Charles r., and contains about 200 dwellings, and the co. buildings. The Boston and Providence R. R. passes through the t., and gives off a branch R. R., 2 m. long, to the village. Manufactures are carried on to some extent, and there are two newspapers published weekly, the "D. Gazette" (free soil), and the "Norfolk Democrat." Pop. 4,477.

THE STATE OF DELAWARE.

DELAWARE, next to Rhode Island, the smallest State of the Union, and, in point of population, much inferior to that State, lies between 35° 25' and 39° 47' latitudes N., and between 74° 56' and 75° 46' longitudes W. of Greenwich, or 1° 22' and 2° 06' E. of Washington. It is bounded on the N. by Pennsylvania (from which the arc of a circle drawn with a radius of 12 miles from Newcastle as a centre, divides it), on the E. by Delaware Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, and on the S. and W. by Maryland, occupying the north-eastern portion of the peninsula between the bays Chesapeake and Delaware. The N. and W. and S. boundaries were originally determined by Mason and Dixon, under whose name the lines are still known. The length of the State, N. and S., is about 92 miles, and its width varies from 36 miles in the S. to less than 10 in the N., the area being 2,120 sq. miles.

Nearly the whole of Delaware lies on the Atlantic plain. The northern part, however, to Christiana creek, belongs to the primary tract, and is hilly and somewhat rugged; but there are no hills exceeding 500 feet in height above the ocean. South of the creek above named, the surface is an almost perfect level, the general slope being toward the Delaware and the ocean. In the south-west the direction of the slope is toward Chesapeake Bay. A table-land, or low sandy ridge, nowhere more than 60 or 70 feet in height near its western boundary, passes through the State, and forms the watershed of the peninsula. This table-land abounds with swamps, in which most of the rivers and streams have their sources, some flowing west into the Chesapeake, and others east into the Delaware. At the southern extremity of the State is the Cypress Swamp, a morass 12 miles in length and 6 miles in width, including an area of 50,000 acres of land, the whole of which is a high and level basin, very wet, though undoubtedly the highest land between the sea and the bay. This swamp contains a great variety of trees and plants, and is infested by wild animals and reptiles. In the northern parts of the State, along the Delaware River and Bay, and for 8 or 10 miles inland, the soils are generally rich clays, in which the most useful agricultural staples can be easily reared; from thence to the swamps the soil is light and sandy, and of an inferior quality; and the central and southern parts have also a sandy soil, which gradually becomes more unproductive as the south is approached. Bog-iron ore is found in the swampy tracts in the south, and has long been used for economical purposes; shell marl, highly valuable in agriculture, occurs, and in the north is found kaolin or porcelain clay, which has supplied the Philadelphia Works with that valuable earth.

The climate of the State is generally mild, and highly favorable to agricultural pursuits. The northern portion has a salubrious atmosphere, but where the land is swampy, endemic sicknesses prevail to a considerable extent. The natural productions are similar to those of the middle region of the Atlantic States. Some large timber grows in the north, and throughout the State, in localities, woods of various kinds are found, and much has been exported at different periods.

All the rivers of Delaware are small, generally rising within the State, and flowing into the Delaware; the Brandywine, however, comes in from Pennsylvania, and the head waters of the Choptank and Nanticoke, which pass into Maryland, are within its limits. The streams are generally wide in proportion to their length, and navigable by small craft several miles from their mouths. The Brandywine (Brandewyne or Brandy River, of the Dutch) is, in the upper part of its course, a valuable mill-stream, but at Wilmington it receives Christiana Creek, and becomes navigable for large ships. Small vessels also go up the latter branch to Christiana Bridge. The Appoquinimink River, Duck Creek, Jones' Creek, Mother or Murder Kill, Mispillon or Mospillon Creek, Broad Kill, Indian Creek, etc., are the other principal streams.

The eastern shore is washed by Delaware Bay; in all its length it has no good harbors, but generally presents long sandy beaches to the waves. To remedy this inconvenience, the General Government has constructed the Delaware Breakwater, opposite the village of Lewestown, and above Cape Henlopen: it consists of two piers, one of which is designed to form a shelter from the fury of the waves, which roll in here with great violence, and the other to afford protection from the masses of floating ice brought down by the ebb tide. The breakwater proper is 2,743 feet long at the bottom, or 2,030 feet above high water, 75 feet wide at low water mark, and raised 15 feet above low, or 3 feet above high water mark. The ice-breaker is 1,710 feet in length at bottom, and 1,375 at top, of the same breadth as the breakwater, but only 9 feet in height. The whole work has cost nearly $3,000,000. Rehoboth Bay, and the estuary, called Indian River, are the only arms of the sea extending inland: these, about 9 miles south of Cape Henlopen, are spacious but shallow basins, not admitting vessels of more than 6 feet draft. Cape False is the headland forming the south side of their common inlet from the ocean.

The first European settlers of Delaware were Swedes and Dutch, and their posterity still remain here, but have become merged in the more numerous body of other origins. There are a large number of blacks in the State, constituting one-fourth of the whole population, but of these only a small portion is held in slavery. The first census of which there is any record, was that of 1652, when there were about 3,000 inhabitants in the State; in 1700 the estimated number was 6,000, and in 1750 it had risen to 25,000. The first United States' census, taken in 1790, gives the whole population at 59,096, and from that period its decennial movements have been as follows:

Date of Census.	White Persons.	Colored Persons.		Total Population.	Increase.
		Free.	Slave.		Numerical.	Percent.
1790	46,310	8,599	8,587	59,096
1800	49,852	8,263	6,153	64,273	5,177	8.7
1810	55,361	13,136	4,177	72,674	8,401	13.7
1820	55,282	12,953	4,509	72,749	75	0.1
1830	57,601	15,555	3,292	76,748	3,999	5.4
1840	58,561	16,919	2,605	78,085	1,337	1.7
1850	71,289	17,957	2,289	91,535	13,450	17.2

Of the total population, in 1850, there were persons deaf and dumb, 53; blind, 46; insane, 70; and idiotic, 101.

The State of Delaware is divided into 3 counties and 25 hundreds. The counties are Newcastle, in the north; Kent, in the middle; and Sussex, in the south. Newcastle County is subdivided into 9 hundreds, viz.: Appoquinimink, Brandywine, Christiana, Mill Creek, Newcastle, Pencader, Red Lion, St. George's, and White Clay Creek, and contains an area of 271,490 acres. Kent County is subdivided into 6 hundreds, viz.: Dover, Duck Creek, Little Creek, Mother or Murder Kill, Milford, and Mispillon, and contains an area of 392,660 acres. And Sussex County is subdivided into 10 hundreds, viz.: Broad Kill, Broad Creek, Baltimore, Cedar Creek, Dagsborough, Indian River, Little Creek, Lewes and Rehoboth, Nanticoke, and North-West Fork, and contains an area of 636,100 acres.

Agriculture is the principal occupation of the inhabitants; but in the north, where there is abundance of water-power, manufactures have long been in existence, and are in a very flourishing condition. Commerce and trade are also extensive, and the whale fisheries have been prosecuted with success from Wilmington. The statistics of the wealth and industry of the State in 1850, as exhibited in the census, etc., of that year, were as follows:

Occupied Lands, etc.—Improved lands, 580,862 acres; and unimproved lands, 375,282 acres—valued together at the sum of $18,880,031. Number of farms, 6,068. Value of farming implements and machinery, $510,279.

Live-Stock.—Horses, 13,852; asses and mules, 791; milch cows, 19,248; working oxen, 9,797; other cattle, 24,166; sheep, 27,503; and swine, 56,261—valued in the aggregate at $1,849,281.

Grain Crops.—Wheat, 482,251 bushels; rye, 8,066 bushels; Indian corn, 3,145,533 bushels; oats, 604,513 bushels; barley, 56 bushels; and buckwheat, 8,015 bushels.

Other Crops.—Peas and beans, 4,120 bushels; Irish potatoes, 240,542 bushels; sweet potatoes, 65,443 bushels; hay, 80,159 tons; clover-seed, 2,525 bushels; other grass-seed, 1,493 bushels; hops, 348 bushels; water-rotted hemp, 570 tons; flax, 11,450 pounds; flax-seed, 858 bushels; molasses, 50 gallons; wine, 145 gallons, etc. The value of orchard products amounted to $46,574; and the value of market-garden products, to $12,714.

Products of Animals.—Wool, 57,765 pounds; butter, 1,055,398 pounds; cheese, 3,187 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered in the year, $373,665. Beeswax and honey were produced to the amount of 41,243 pounds.

Home-made manufactures. For the year ending 1st June, 1850, were valued at $38,321.

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested in manufactures, $0,000,000; value of raw material, fuel, etc., consumed, $0,000,000; average number of hands employed, 00,000—males, 00,000, and females, 0,000; average monthly cost of labor—male, $000,000, and female, $00,000; annual value of manufactured articles produced, $0,000,000. The whole number of manufacturing establishments, producing to the value of $500 and upward in 1850, was 513; and of these, 12 were cotton factories, 8 woolen mills, 15 establishments engaged in manufacturing iron, viz.: 13 in manufacturing castings, and 2 wrought iron, and 16 tanneries. In the cotton manufactures, the capital invested amounted to $460,000; the cotton consumed in the year, 4,730 bales of 400 pounds; and the value of all raw material, $312,063; hands employed—male 413 and female 425; monthly cost of labor—male $6,326, and female $4,926; products for the year, 3,521,636 yards sheeting, etc., and 533,000 pounds yarn, valued together at $538,439. The capital invested in the woolen manufacture was $148,500; wool consumed, 393,000 pounds; value of all raw material, $204,172; average hands employed—male 122, and female 18; monthly cost of labor—male $2,293 and female $312; annual products, 152,000 yards of cloth, etc., valued in the aggregate at $251,010. In the manufacture of castings, the capital invested was $373,500; the value of raw material, fuel, etc., $153,852; hands employed, 250, at average wages per month, $23.36. Castings manufactured in the year, 3,630 tons; and value of entire products, $267,462, of which $55,000 was the value of articles other than castings. The capital invested in wrought iron manufactures, amounted to $15,000; value of raw materials, $19,500; hands employed, 50 males, at average monthly wages of $24.19; tons of wrought iron made in the year preceding, 550; and value of entire products, $55,000. In the tanneries, the capital employed amounted to $99,350; the value of hides and skins used, $99,620; hands employed, 108, costing monthly, $2,530; number of skins tanned, 12,950, and of sides of leather, 52,100—together valued at $163,742. The remaining employments of the aggregate number (513) are various, but in the main consist of mills for flouring, grist-mills, saw-mills, gunpowder-mills, paper-mills, smitheries, etc.; and in the north are several machine-shops. Some salt is made from sea-water at Lewes and Rehoboth, and considerable ship-building is carried on at Wilmington.

Foreign Commerce.—The direct foreign commerce of Delaware is very inconsiderable, as the importations and exportations of the State are chiefly effected through Baltimore, New York, and Philadelphia, especially the latter port; the coasting trade, however, is extensive and active. During the year ending 30th June, 1850, no direct imports or exports are recorded in the Treasury returns. The amount of shipping owned within the State at the above date amounted to 16,719 tons, of which 1,651 tons was of the class "registered," 14,639 tons of the class "licensed and enrolled," and 447 tons small licensed craft under 20 tons. The shipping sailed by steam-power amounted to 2,774 tons. There were built within the year 16 vessels, of an aggregate burden of 1,848 tons, viz.: 12 schooners, 3 sloops, and 1 steamer. The following table will exhibit the movement of foreign commerce in the State from 1791 to 1850:

Internal Communication.—Except in the north, where the State is crossed by a canal and two railroads, the lines of travel are over ordinary turnpike and M'Adam roads. The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal is an important work, connecting those bays by a channel navigable for sea-going vessels; it extends from Delaware City, 46 miles below Philadelphia, to Back Creek, a navigable branch of Elk River, in Maryland, 13½ miles, and is 66 feet wide at the top and 10 feet deep, and it has two tide and two lift locks. The deep cut in this canal is 4 miles in length, through a hill 90 feet high. The work was completed in 1829, at a cost of $2,250,000. The Newcastle and Frenchtown R. R. extends also across the peninsula, between the Delaware and the Chesapeake, 16½ miles, and, in connection with steamboats at each terminus, forms a convenient line of transportation between Philadelphia and Baltimore. The Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore R. R. crosses Delaware further north, and is the nearest land line between those cities, and the usual route taken by travelers between the Northern and Southern States. These are all the completed works of internal improvement within the State, but there are others projected and in progress, the object of which are principally to form a direct line from New York to Norfolk in Virginia, and incidentally to afford accommodation to the agriculturalists of the southern sections.

Banks, etc.—On the 1st day of January, 1851, there were in Delaware six banks and three branch banks. The aggregate condition of those at that date was as follows: liabilities—capital, $1,293,135; circulation, $338,960; deposits, $592,765; other liabilities, $170,873; and assets—loans and discounts, $2,234,813; stocks, $52,983; real estate, $117,941; other investments, $2,000; other assets, $251,145; specie funds, $51,022, and specie, $159,778.

Government.—The present constitution of Delaware gives the right of voting to all free white male citizens 21 years old, and who have resided in the State one year and in the county in which they offer to vote one month next before an election.

The legislature, styled the General Assembly, consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. Senators, three from each county, must be at least 27 years old, possessed of 200 acres of freehold land in the county, or of an estate therein worth $1,000, citizens and inhabitants of the State for three years, and for the last year of the county, and must be chosen in counties for the term of four years. Representatives must be at least 24 years old, and have the same qualifications as senators, except as regards the property qualification, and must be chosen for two years. The legislature meets at Dover on the first Monday in January biennially

DELAWARE.

Delaware sends only one Representative to the Federal Congress.

The Governor (elected for four years by a plurality of votes) must be at least 30 years old, a citizen of the State for twelve years next before the first meeting of the legislature after his election, and an inhabitant for the last six years. The President of the Senate, the Speaker of the Representatives, and the Secretary of State are successively alternates to fill the office should it become vacant by death or disability of the Governor; but in case the office be filled by the Secretary of State, the General Assembly, at its next session, chooses a Governor ad interim. If the Governor elect die, decline, etc., the Governor in office continues until a new election is had. The Secretary of State is appointed by the Governor. The general elections are held on the second Tuesday of November.

The Judiciary consists of a Superior Court, Court of Chancery, Orphans' Court, etc. There are five judges in the State, one of whom is Chancellor and President of the Orphans' Court, and of the other four, one is Chief Justice of the State, and three associate justices, one resident in each county. The Chief Justice and two of the associates form the Superior Court and Court of General Session, and all the judges, except the Chancellor, form the Court of Oyer and Terminer. The Court of Errors and Appeals is composed of three or more of the judges. The Orphans' Court consists of the Chancellor and the associate judge of the county. Judges are appointed and hold office during good behavior. The Register's Court is held by the Register, with appeal to the Superior Court, and all proceedings are in writing.

The constitution provides that no act of incorporation shall be passed without a two-third vote, unless it be the renewal of an existing incorporation; and all acts are to contain a power of revocation by the legislature. No act hereafter passed shall be in force longer than twenty years without a re-enactment of the legislature. No person belonging to the military, naval, or marine service of the United States can gain such a residence as will entitle him to vote by being stationed at any military or naval post in the State.

Finances, etc.—The government of Delaware is one of the least expensive in the Union. In 1850 the whole income amounted to only $31,863 83, and the expenditure to a sum $5,071 41 less than the income. The sources of income were—bank tax, $3,963 61; railroad tax, $2,500; interest on loans, $5,147 62; bank dividends, $15,305; retailers' licenses, etc., $4,352 80; fines, etc., $549 81, and sundries, $45 49. The expenditures were—executive, $3,333 33; legislature, $2,010 97; judiciary, $5,500; school fund, $15,947 62, and balance, $5,071 41. The resources of the State are amply sufficient to meet all expenses of the government without recourse to personal or property tax. The invested capital of the State (including school moneys) amounts to $414,725 83, and the permanent annual income is as follows: dividends and interest on loans, $20,052 64; taxes on corporations, $5,725; retailers' and tavern licenses, $4,352 80; fines and forfeitures, $549 81, and sundries, $1,073 75. The State is free from debt of any description.

Religious Denominations.—The statistics of the several religious denominations, as given by each severally, in 1850, were as follows: the Protestant Episcopal had a bishop, 16 clergymen, 537 communicants; the Roman Catholics had 4 churches (at Brandywine, Delaware City, Newcastle, and Wilmington), and 3 priests; the Baptists (regular) had 1 church, 2 ordained and 2 licensed ministers, and 352 members; the Baptists (anti-mission) had 10 churches, 3 ordained and 3 licensed preachers, and 335 members; the Presbyterians (O. S.) belong to the Synod of Philadelphia and Presbytery of Newcastle, and had 17 ministers and 1,276 members; the Presbyterians (N. S.) belong to the Synod of Pennsylvania and Presbytery of Wilmington, and had 15 clergy and 1,324 members; the Methodists have about 20 ministers, and are more numerous than any other single denomination; and there are also a considerable number of Quakers in the State.

Educational Statistics.—The number of free schools in the State in 1850, was 209, and of scholars attending them 13,288, divided as follows: Newcastle County, 72 schools and 4,969 scholars; Kent County, 55 schools and 3,576 scholars, and Sussex County, 82 schools and 4,443 scholars. The total amount paid for tuition was $38,461 70, viz. in Newcastle, $17,293 72; in Kent, $10,964 72, and in Sussex, $10,203 26; and there was a sum charged for contingencies amounting to $5,747 63, making the annual cost, $44,209 38. The sources whence these moneys were derived are stated thus—from School Fund, $27,507 33, and from contribution and tax, $17,089 56. Besides these there are between 34 and 40 academies and grammar schools in the State. Delaware College, at Newark, was founded in 1833, and in 1850 had a president, 5 professors, and 30 students; its alumni at that period numbered 78, of which 42 were in the ministry, and its library contained 7,000 volumes. St. Mary's College, at Wilmington, is under the sway of the Roman Catholics, and is, perhaps, the best literary institution of the State; in 1850 it had a president and 3 professors, and 107 students.

Periodical Press.—The whole number of newspapers published in Delaware in 1850 was 11, and of these 2 were issued tri-weekly, 1 semi-weekly, and 8 weekly (of the weekly, however, 3 are editions of the tri-weeklies and the semi-weekly newspapers). The total circulation of each edition of the tri-weeklies was 1,900, of the semi-weekly 1,000, and of the weeklies 4,600 copies—in the aggregate equal to 12,300 copies weekly, or 639,600 copies annually.

Historical Sketch.—Lord De la War, Governor of Virginia, appears to have been the first to enter the bay which thence took his name. This was in 1610. The Dutch, from whom the names of its capes are derived, frequented it soon after, and had a post at Hoerenkil, but the precise date of their arrival is uncertain. The bay was by them called Nieuw Port May, or Gædyn's Bay, and the river Zuyl Rivier, or South River. The Swedish W. I. Company, chartered in 1635 by Oxenstiern, sent out in 1637 a ship with a body of colonists under Peter Menewe or Minuits. In the following year Minuits sent himself on the Maniques, now Brandywine River, and there built Fort Christina. The Dutch, however, had never relinquished their claim in this region, and in 1651 they built Fort Cassimir on the site of Newcastle. The subsequent settlements of the Swedes were mostly within the present limits of Pennsylvania, where New Gottenburg (Nya-Goethoborg), the capital of New Sweden (Nya-Sveriga), was founded on the Island of Tinicum. In 1655 a small force from New Amsterdam reduced the Swedish settlements, which were incorporated with New Netherlands, and with that colony taken possession of by the English in 1664. The settlements on the Delaware, although this region fell within the chartered limits of Maryland, were attached to the province of New York until 1681, when they were purchased of the Duke of York by William Penn, who annexed them to Pennsylvania under the name of the Territories, or the Three Lower Counties on the Delaware. They continued subordinate to that province, though with a distinct legislature, from 1701 until 1776, when Delaware declared itself an independent State, and a constitution was framed by the inhabitants thereof. By this constitution the executive power was vested in a President and Privy Council, elected by the legislature. In 1792 a new constitution was framed, which was modified in 1802, in 1831, and in 1838; and it is now again proposed to alter the fundamental law. The principal provisions of the present constitution are given elsewhere. Delaware has hitherto been one of the least progressive of the American States, but within the last decade its population, material wealth, and general interests have been developed in a very respectable ratio.

DOVER is the capital of the State.

DELAWARE county, Ja. Situate N. E., and contains 576 sq. m. Drained by numerous tributaries of Makoqueta r., which passes through the co. from N. W. to S. E., furnishing excellent mill-power. Surface chiefly prairie, intermixed with timber groves. Soils of good quality, deep and productive. Farms 141; manuf. 3; dwell. 383, and pop—wh. 1,753, fr. col. 0—total 1,753. Capital: Delhi.

DELAWARE county, Ind. Situate E., and contains 394 sq. m. Drained by White and Mississinewa rivers. Surface level or gently undulating, and mostly well timbered. Wheat and Indian corn are largely produced, and much attention is given to stock. Farms 1,054; manuf. 34; dwell. 1,874, and pop—wh. 10,839, fr. col. 4—total 10,843. Capital: Muncietown. Public Works: Indianapolis and Bellefontaine R. R.; Fort Wayne and Southern R. R.

DELAWARE county, N. Y. Situate toward the S. E., and contains 1,362 sq. m. Drained by the Mohawk or Delaware r. and its affluents. Surface greatly diversified by valleys and mountains; the latter being extremely irregular, and broken by numerous streams. Soils generally of good quality—in the valleys a rich deep mold, and on the hills a sandy loam, sometimes stony. Dense forests cover a great portion of the land. Grain and grass are produced abundantly, and grazing is much attended to, the butter produced being second only in quality to that of Oneida co. Lumber is floated to market on the Delaware and Susquehanna rivers. Farms 4,747; manuf. 433; dwell. 7,105, and pop—wh. 33,623, fr. col. 206—total 39,334. Capital: Delhi. Public Works: New York and Erie R. R.

DELAWARE county, Ohio. Situate centrally, and contains 612 sq. m. Drained by Scioto and Whetstone rivers, and Alum and Big Walnut creeks, which run from N. to S. through the co., and furnish extensive water-power. Surface rolling, and well supplied with timber. Soils generally of excellent fertility—wheat, Indian corn, potatoes, grasses, tobacco, etc., grow finely, and cattle, sheep, and swine are raised in large numbers. Farms 1,555; manuf. 95; dwell. 3,754, and pop—wh. 21,682, fr. col. 135—total 21,517. Capital: Delaware. Public Works: Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R.; Springfield, Mount Vernon and Pittsburg R. R., etc.

DELAWARE county, Penn. Situate S. E. extreme, and contains 224 sq. m. Drained by Darby, Ridley, and Chester creeks of Delaware r., which forms its S. E. borders. The surface is moderately undulating, and the soils very fertile and highly cultivated. Its agricultural products are wheat, Indian corn, and potatoes, besides which it furnishes an immense amount of vegetables for the Philadelphia markets. It has a large trade, and its manufacturing interest is very extensive, embracing woolens, cotton goods, leather, crockery, and paper. Farms 1,376; manuf. 299; dwell. 4,118, and pop—wh. 23,120, fr. col. 1,559—total 24,679. Capital: Chester. Public Works: Philadelphia and Columbia R. R.; Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore R. R., etc.

DELAWARE, t. p. v., and cap. Delaware co., Ohio: on the W. bank of the Oleatangy or Whetstone r., 22 m. N. by W. Columbus. The v. contains a handsome C. II. and other co. offices, 6 churches, several factories and mills, etc., and of late has become connected with the railway commerce of the State, by which it will rapidly increase in importance and wealth. It lies on the line of an E. and W. railroad, and has connections with the Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R., which runs N. and S. about 4 m. to the eastward of the place. These connect it with the general system of western railroads, and hence with all the great centres of manufactures, trade, and commerce. The "Democratic Standard" (dem.), and the "Democratic Gazette" (whig), are issued weekly. Pop. of v. 2,075—of t. 3,322.

DELAWARE bay: at the mouth of Delaware r., is a large arm of the sea, 75 m. long and 20 across its mouth, between Cape May on the N. and Cape Henlopen on the S. In the middle it is 30 m. wide. The navigation is dangerous and difficult, being interrupted by many shoals. Below Port Penn, 70 m. from the ocean, the bay has no safe natural barrier, nor is there one for several hundred m. S. from New York. To partially remedy this inconvenience, the United States Government have erected a magnificent breakwater within Cape Henlopen. The anchorage ground, or roadstead, is in a cove directly west of the Cape. The east or seaward end of the breakwater rests on the S. end of an extensive shoal, called the Shears, about 2 m. N. of the Cape. (See DELAWARE, The State of).

DELAWARE river: rises in two branches on the W. side of Catskill mountains, in the State of New York—the Mohawks, or main branch, rises from a small lake near the borders of Schoharie county, in 42° 45' N. lat., at an elevation of 1,886 feet above tide water, and flows S. W. across Delaware County, nearly 50 m. to the E. line of Broome County, within 10 m. of the Susquehanna r., and turning suddenly, it pursues a S. E. course of 5 m. to the Pennsylvania line, in 42° N. lat., 8 m., below which it receives the Popocatan branch from the S. E. This branch rises in Roxbury township, Delaware co., and pursues a S. W. course, about 50 m. parallel with the main branch. From the junction of the two branches the river proceeds in a winding course, S. E. for 60 m. to the N. W. corner of New Jersey, in 41° 24' N. lat. at Carpenter's Point, and the mouth of Neversink r. It then turns to the S. W., along the base of the Kittanning chain of mountains, 35 m., when it passes this mountain by what is called the "Water Gap," which is considered a natural wonder. The distance through the mountain is about 2 m., and the banks rise in a rugged and lofty wall, 1,600 feet high, precipitously from the water's edge, leaving at the S. E. entrance scarcely room for a road, overhung with immense masses of rock. The passage, however, widens toward the N. W., and the river contains some beautiful and fertile islands. Through this gap will be built a railroad, connecting the Wyoming coal-field of Pennsylvania with the Eastern markets. The view of the gap is highly picturesque, and the river here has great depth. From this point it pursues a S. E., and then a S. W. course to Easton, where it receives the Lehigh, a large tributary river, from the W. A little below, the river passes through South Mountain, and has a S. E. course to Trenton, 60 m. below Easton, having in that distance 25 rapids, with a total fall of 165 feet. These rapids are navigable at high water. At Trenton is a fall that obstructs navigation, and below which it enters tide water. The river S. of Trenton turns to the S. W., until near the bay, which enters the ocean in a S. E. direction. Five miles below Philadelphia, it receives the Schuylkill r., a large tributary from the N. W. The whole course of the r., from its source to the entrance into the bay, is about 300 m., and to its entrance into the ocean, 375 m. It is navigable for ships of the line to Philadelphia, by the course of the river and bay 120 m. from the ocean, and 45 m. from the entrance into the bay; and for sloops 35 m. farther, or 155 from the ocean to Trenton. Above the falls, at Trenton, it is navigable for boats of 8 or 9 tons for 100 m. The Delaware r. is connected with the Hudson r. and the bays of New York by the Delaware and Hudson Canal, by the Morris Canal, and by the Delaware and Raritan Canal. On these great works, a vast amount of coal from the Pennsylvania and Maryland mines is annually transported. There is also a canal from Delaware City, 42 miles below Philadelphia, to Back cr., a tributary of Elk r., which falls into Chesapeake Bay; this opens a navigable communication between Baltimore and Philadelphia, etc. Several bridges cross the Delaware, the lowest of which is at Trenton.

DE RUYTER, t. and p. v., Madison co., N. Y.: 105 m. W. Albany. Drained by the upper stream of Tioughnioga r. Surface high and hilly, with soils clay and sandy loam. The v. on the S. E. side of the r. has about 60 dwellings and 350 inhabitants. Pop. of t. 1,931.

DES ARC, p. o., Prairie co., Ark.

DESHA county, Ark. Situate S. E., and contains 612 sq. m. The Arkansas and White rivers unite in this co., and fall into the Mississippi, which borders it on the E. Bayou Bartholomew also traverses the co. from N. W. to S. E., besides which drainage is effected by a number of lakelets and creeks tributaries to the great streams above named. Surface low and level, subject to extensive inundations. Soils fertile, where susceptible of cultivation. Farms 118; manuf. 2; dwell. 850, and pop.—wh. 1,675, fr. col. 56, sl. 1,169—total 2,900. Capital: Napoleon.

DES MOINES county, Ia. Situate S. E. on Mississippi r., and contains 884 sq. m. Drained by Flint cr. and other tributaries of the Mississippi. Skunk r. washes the S. border, and has also several creeks from the interior. Surface undulating, with high bluffs facing the Mississippi. Soils fertile. Farms 883; manuf. 23; dwell. 1,919, and pop.—wh. 12,963, fr. col. 24—total 12,987. Capital: Burlington.

DES MOINES lake, La Porte co., Ind.: a beautiful lake in the N. E. corner of the county, and is variously called Dis-maugh or Dishamine, words corrupted from Des Moines, which signifies the Lake of the Monks.

DES MOINES river, Ia.: rises in the Coteau des Prairies, and flows in a S. E. direction, through the S. part of the State, and enters the Mississippi at the foot of Des Moines Rapids, on the boundary between Iowa and Missouri. In high stages of the water it is navigable 100 miles for steam-boats, and for keel-boats in all seasons. It is the great interior river of the State, and ought, with propriety, to have given its name to it.

DE SOTO parish, La. Situate on W. border of State, between Red r. on the E., and Sabine r. on the W., and contain 828 sq. m. Drained by a number of streams tributary to the Sabine, and Bayou Pierre Lake. Surface much varied, but nowhere hilly. Bayou Pierre Lake, a large piece of water, occupies the N. E. corner of the co. Cotton and Indian corn are the chief products. Farms 427; manuf. 9; dwell. 655, and pop.—wh. 8,548, fr. col. 25, sl. 4,446—total 9,019. Capital: Mansfield.

DE SOTO county, Ms. Situate N. W., and contains 840 sq. m. Drained by Cold-Water r. and other streams flowing W. into the Mississippi r., which washes its N. W. line. Surface low, but not swampy, or liable to overflows. Soils good, and productive of cotton, Indian corn, and potatoes. Timber plentiful. Farms 1,257; manuf. 38; dwell. 1,644, and pop.—wh. 9,487, fr. col. 2, sl. 9,553—total 19,062. Capital: Hernando.

DETROIT, p. o., Somerset co., Me.

DETROIT, p. city, and cap. Wayne co., Mich.: on the N. W. bank of Detroit strait or river, 82 m. E. S. E. Lansing; lat. 42° 24' N., and long. 82° 58' W.—526 m. from Washington. The city extends along the river more than a mile and a half, the centre of it being about 7 m. from Lake St. Clair and 18 m. from Lake Erie. The original bed of the river opposite Detroit, and for a mile above and about three miles below, varies from 48 to 52 chains in width, averaging five-eighths of a mile—the width from the docks of Detroit to the opposite docks of Sandwich being about half a mile. The depth between the docks varies from 12 to 48 feet, averaging 32 feet; the descent from Lake St. Clair to Lake Erie is about 6 feet, or 3 inches per mile; and the velocity of the current in the deepest part of the channel opposite the city is 2½ m. an hour. The stream is so deep and its current so strong and uniform, that it keeps itself clear, and its navigation is not affected as is that of the Mississippi with either rocks, sandbars, trees, or sauyers. Its current also carries along the ice with a slow and uniform motion, so that it is never dammed up in winter, while the St. Lawrence, at Montreal, is shallow and full of rocks, against which the ice lodges, and often forms a dam across the river and raises the water from 20 to 25 feet, overflowing its low banks for miles, and sweeping off and destroying large amounts of property. These peculiarities of the river make Detroit a secure and accessible harbor in all seasons.

The plan of the city is rather uncouth, and labored with much mathematical ingenuity, better suited, it is acknowledged, to flatter the fancy than to promote practical utility. Upon the river, and for 1,200 feet back, it is rectangular—in the rear of this triangular. The streets are spacious; among the more noted are the eight avenues—Madison, Michigan Grand, and Washington Grand avenues, each 200 feet wide; Woodward, Monroe, Miami, Macomb, and Jefferson avenues, each 120 feet wide, and all, except Michigan, Monroe and Jefferson, terminating at one point, called the Grand Circus. The other streets are 60 feet wide, and generally cross at right angles. Atwater Street, upon the river, and Woodbridge Street, running parallel with it upon the declivity, are mostly occupied by stores and dealers in heavy merchandise. Woodward Avenue, leading from the river at right angles with Jefferson Avenue, through Campus Martius and the central part of the city, ranks as among the first business streets. The principal street running with the course of the river upon the summit of the declivity and through the central and most densely populated part of the city is Jefferson Avenue. Upon this are most of the public and private offices located, as well as the dry goods and fancy stores generally. The Campus Martius is one of the most noted of the public squares—there are several others. The argillaceous nature of the soil renders the streets unpleasant in wet weather, but much has already been effected to abate this drawback by paving and sewerage.

The city is supplied with water from the Detroit River by means of a hydraulic establishment in the upper part of the city. The reservoir which contains the water is of cast iron, 60 feet diameter and 20 feet deep, secured by strong iron bolts and rivets; supported by a circular brick building 62 feet in diameter, at an elevation of 47 feet from its foundation. It is inclosed with a frame building, standing on a brick foundation, 65 feet in diameter and 24 feet high, with a conical roof. The reservoir is supplied by means of a steam-engine, which works a forcing pump that is fixed several feet below the surface of the river, and is found fully adequate to furnish an abundant supply of good and wholesome water to the whole city. Connected with these works there are said to be about 4 m. of iron pipe and 10 m. of tamarack logs, and 50 hydrants or fire plugs, all of which cost the city some $150,000.

Detroit, although one of the most ancient settlements in North America, is, to every appearance, and in reality, of recent growth. Of the ancient style of the French buildings, scarcely a vestige remains. The city is mostly built of wood, although there are a goodly number of substantial brick buildings. The most interesting of the public buildings are the old State House; the United States buildings (of polished limestone); the State buildings for the Supreme Court and public offices; the County Court House; the County Jail; the City Hall and market; and the Firemen's Hall. There are also 16 churches in the city, many of which are worthy of special notice; of these 4 are Roman Catholic, 2 Episcopalian, 1 Presbyterian, 1 Scotch Presbyterian, 1 Congregational, 3 Methodist, 2 Baptist, 1 German Lutheran, and 1 Sailors' Bethel. The new Catholic Cathedral, or St. Peter's Church, is a large and substantial edifice, and being high, massive, and of good proportions, it has an imposing appearance. It is built of brick, and is 160 feet long and 81 feet wide. The corner-stone was laid 29th June, 1845, and it was consecrated 29th June, 1848. The Cathedral of St. Anne, known as the French Church, is 116 feet long by 60 feet wide. The First Presbyterian Church is also a good, substantial, and well-appearing brick edifice, with a portico and colonade in front, including which its length is 100 feet and its breadth 60 feet. In addition to these churches there are several religious societies which meet in other public buildings.

Detroit has several extensive manufactories. It has five large steam saw-mills, which annually turn out upward of 9,000,000 feet of lumber and 4,000,000 laths. These are situated directly on the river, and receive, without the trouble of land carriage, the lumber chiefly brought down from the northern parts of the State. Ship and boat building is also a very large and important branch of business. There are also three large foundries, with machine shops connected with them, which manufacture steam-engines, mill-irons, machinery of various kinds, stoves, plows, etc. These employ about 200 hands. There are also two boiler factories for the manufacture of boilers for steam-engines, and several machine-shops for working in iron and some in brass. There are likewise two pair factories, a sash factory, a steam flouring-mill, two tanneries, and five breweries. Cabinet-making, and most other kinds of mechanical employments, are pursued to a considerable extent, and something is done at shoemaking, but much the largest portion of the boots and shoes worn in Michigan are made in Massachusetts, and most of the cabinet ware and coarse clothing comes from New York.

In addition to the retail trade there is a heavy wholesale business done in Detroit, and the amount of it is annually increasing. Nearly all the merchants of the interior depend on Detroit to replenish their stock, and a large portion of them buy all their goods there.

The export and import trade of Detroit is immense. The imports coastwise, for 1848, are estimated at $3,502,660, and the exports at $2,781,192, and the port has also a considerable trade with Canada, much of it illicit. The greater portion of the agricultural products of the State are shipped from this port. The shipping belonging to or owned in the collection district are 39 steamers, 4 propellers, 1 barge, 8 brigs, 109 schooners, and 36 sloops—in the aggregate, 23,619 tons. Regular lines of steamers sail and arrive daily to and from all parts, connecting here with the Michigan Central R. R., and with it forming a direct line from the north and east to Chicago and the Mississippi, and by this route thousands of emigrants travel annually, and millions of dollars' worth of property are transported.

There are several charitable institutions in the city, and much attention has been paid to education. Among the charitable institutions, the orphan asylums stand pre-eminent, and reflect much credit on the inhabitants. There are also several scientific and literary societies, as the Historical Society, the State Literary Institute, the Medical Society, etc. Here, also, is one of the branches of the University, and 3 miles above the city is St. Philip's College; Primary and Public Schools are numerous, and there are a sufficient number of private and classical schools to supply all exigencies.

The periodical press of Detroit consists of 3 daily newspapers, 1 tri-weekly, 7 weeklies, and 2 monthlies; the dailies are, the "D. Free Press" (dem.), which has also a tri-weekly and weekly issue; the "D. Advertiser" (whig), which has also a weekly issue; and the "Daily Tribune;" the weeklies are the "Peninsular Freeman" (free soil); "Le Citoyen" (French); the "Western Advocate" (whig); the "New Covenant" (relig.); and the "Michigan Christian Herald" (Baptist); and the monthlies are "Wellman's Miscellany" (lit.); and the "Michigan Farmer" (agric.) All these are conducted with an energy and talent surpassed only by the metropolitan press.

Detroit has 4 banks, the condition of which, on the 26th Dec. 1851, was as follows: liabilities—capital, $761,223; deposits, $705,692; circulation, $617,588; due banks, $22,858; and profits, $375,084; and resources—loans, $1,202,643; specie, $150,214; bank balances, $275,933; real estate, $193,025; and stocks, mortgages, etc., $650,000. The Michigan State Bank had a capital of $151,578; the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank, $327,580; the Peninsular Bank, $100,000; and the Michigan Insurance Bank, $182,070.

The present site of the city of Detroit, seems to have been visited by the French as early as 1610. In 1720 the Fort Pontchartrain had been previously located here. In 1759 the country fell into the hands of the English, and in 1783 became a part of the United States. In 1802 the village was incorporated; in 1805 it was destroyed by fire; in 1810 the act of incorporation was repealed; in 1812 the fort and town surrendered to the British, but were reoccupied in 1813; in 1815 it was re-incorporated. Such is the chronology of its history. In 1810 it contained 770 inhabitants; in 1820, 1,442; in 1830, 2,222; in 1840, 9,192; in 1845, 13,065; and in 1850, 21,019.

DETROIT strait: this stream conducts the collected waters of lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, and St. Clair, to Lake Erie. It is the largest stream of Michigan, and its local position makes it the most important. The word D'Étroit (Fr.) signifies strait, and, as applied to this stream, is a more appropriate appellation than the word river, and was first given to it by the French on its discovery. It is about 25 m. long, and on an average, one and a tenth of a mile broad, and 36 feet deep. It moves with an equable current of about 2 m. per hour. Its descent is 3 inches per mile, or 6 feet and 3 inches for its whole length. Its course is first south-westerly, and then southerly. In the winter season it closes with ice only after a continued succession of severely cold weather. If the temperature of the atmosphere moderates but for a few days, and that moderation even not above the freezing point, it will open by the action of its powerful current, which wears away the thickest ice in a short time. Hence the stream is not often long closed. It has been known to remain one frozen bridge for six weeks, but it was a phenomenon in its history, rarely known, and then only in seasons of the greatest severity. It receives several inconsiderable streams from the American, and two or three from the Canadian shore. The most considerable is the Rouge. There are a number of islands that divert its waters, though they add to the beauty of its scenery. Among the largest are Grosse and Fighting islands. From some cause, there appears to have been a peculiar attraction to the banks of the Detroit more than to any other stream in Michigan. The first settlements of the French were made on it, and the French travelers found three tribes of Indians equally tenacious in their attachment to it. From a gradual accession, its banks on either side have been subdued and settled, so that in many places, for miles, it has the appearance of a continued village of a much older country than the recent State of Michigan. Like the lakes which it connects, it abounds with fine fish, the taking of which has become lucrative. The navigation of the strait is easy, and in the season of it, its waters are covered with steamboats and vessels of every description. The Detroit, although but a few miles in length, is one of the pleasantest and most beautiful streams in the United States. With banks of great fertility, covered with orchards of various fruit, with farms cultivated and productive, accompanied with incomparable scenery, the prospect is rendered exceedingly delightful in passing up the strait.

DUBOIS county, Ind. Situate S., and contains 432 sq. m. Drained by E. fork of White, the Patoka, and other streams. Surface generally level—in the N. E. rolling; soils of ordinary fertility, but the bottoms are rich and fertile. Timber abundant. Corn and wheat are the staple products. Farms 794; manuf. 9; dwell. 1,146, and pop.—wh. 6,300, fr. col. 21—total 6,321. Capital: Jasper.

DUBOIS county, Ia. Situate N. E., and contains 576 sq. m. Drained in the N. by Turkey cr., in the centre by Little Macoqueta r., and S. by the N. fork of Macoqueta r., which, with other streams, falls into the Mississippi, which forms its E. border. Surface rough and uneven, but with much fertile land. Galena or lead ore is very abundant throughout the county, and mining forms the great interest of the inhabitants. Farms 755; manuf. 46; dwell. 1,952, and pop.—wh. 10,516, fr. col. 25—total 10,541. Capital: Dubuque. Public Works: Dubuque and Iowa City R.R., etc.

DUBUQUE, p. v., and cap. Dubuque co., Ia.: on the W. bank of the Mississippi r., 424 m. above St. Louis, and 72 m. N. E. by N. Iowa City. It is built on a table area, or terrace, which extends along the r. for several miles, and the streets are laid out at right angles with each other. Dubuque was settled by Canadian French as early as 1686, for the purpose of trading with the Indians. Besides being the great mineral depot of the Iowa lead region, it is a place of much traffic, and interchanges largely with the vast interior, of which it is the chief outlet. Its chief export is lead, which is sent down the river in vast quantities. In the village are several wholesale stores, and one of the largest hotels of the West. The U. S. Land Office for the Northern District of Iowa, and the office of the Surveyor General of Iowa and Wisconsin, are located here. The population is now 4,071, and is rapidly increasing. There are four newspapers published in the village, the "Miner's Express" (dem.), the "D. Tribune" (whig), the "D. Telegraph" (whig), and the "Norwestliche Democrat" (German). Lead ore is found in abundance within the corporate limits of the village, and for miles around on every side.

DUCHESS county, N. Y. Situate S. E., between Hudson r. and the Connecticut State line; and contains 765 sq. m. Drained by Ten Mile, Fishkill, Wappenger's, and Crum Elbow creeks and their affluents. Surface diversified, but generally hilly, and intersected by two great longitudinal valleys. Some of the hills rise to the height of 1,700 feet; Old Beacon, near Fishkill landing, 1,471 feet, and the Grand Sachem, or New Beacon, 1,655 feet above tide-water. The county abounds in minerals, of which iron, lead, and zinc are the principal. Graphite is obtained near Fishkill, and marble, peat, and marl are found in all parts. Oak, chestnut, and hickory are the principal forest trees. The agricultural productions, besides the grains, are wool, butter, flax, and potatoes. The county has a large manufacturing interest, including almost every branch, and Poughkeepsie employs several large ships in the whaling business. Farms 3,203; manuf. 415; dwell. 9,562, and pop.—wh. 57,022, fr. col. 1,970—total 58,992. Capital: Poughkeepsie. Public Works: Hudson River R. R.: Harlem R. R.; Providence, Hartford, and Fishkill R. R., etc.

It is a thriving place, with a bank, etc. In the t. there are several other manufacturing villages—on Salmon r. and its tributary, Moodus r. Pop. of t, 2,610.
- EASTHAM, t. and p. v., Barnstable co., Mass.: 67 m. S. E. Boston. Situate on Cape Cod, about half way between the elbow and the Cape. Surface flat. Soil sandy and sterile. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in coasting and the fisheries, and in the manufacture of salt, which is produced by the evaporation of sea-water. Pop. 845.
- EAST HAMBURG, p. o., Erie co., N. Y.: 249 m. W. Albany.
- EAST HAMILTON, p. o., Madison county, N. Y.: 82 m. W. by N. Albany.
- EAST HAMPDEN, p. v., Penobscot co., Me.: on the W. side of Penobscot r., immediately below the confluence of Sowadabesook r., 59 m. N. E. Augusta.
- EAST HAMPTON, p. v., Middlesex co., Conn.: on Pine Brook, the outlet of Pocotopogue Pond, 17 m. S. S. E. Hartford. The New York and Boston R. R. (direct line) will pass through the village.
- EAST HAMPTON LAKE, p. o., Middlesex co., Conn.: 15 m. S. S. E. Hartford.
- EAST HAMPTON, t. and p. v., Hampshire co., Mass.: 95 m. W. by S. Boston. Drained by several tributaries of Connecticut r. Surface variegated, and soils alluvial and very productive. The v. is pleasantly situate on a fine mill-stream, and has several factories of cotton goods, boots and shoes, etc. Mt. Tom lies between this t. and the Connecticut r. The line of the abandoned Hampshire and Hampden Canal passes through the t. and will be probably filled up and used as the bed of the New Haven and Northampton R. R. Pop. 1,342.
- EAST HAMPTON, t. and p. v., Suffolk co., N. Y.: 138 m. S. E. Albany. Occupies the extreme E. peninsula of Long Island, and includes Gardiner's and other small islands. Surface level; soil, sandy alluvion. Toward Montauk Point the land is rugged. On this noted point there is a light-house 140 feet high, the light of which can be seen 30 m. from sea. A remnant of the Montauk Indians reside here on a conditional reservation of 1,000 acres. The village on a single street and contains about 400 inhabitants. There are in the t. 168 farms, 2 manufacturing establishments, 423 dwellings, and 2,122 inhabitants.

EAST HANOVER, t. and p. o., Lebanon co., Penn.: 21 m. E. Harrisburg. It lies between the Blue Mountains and Swatara cr., which gives it considerable water-power. It has several mills, etc., and about 2,600 inhabitants.

EAST HARDWICK, p. v., Caledonia co., Verm.: on La Moille r., 24 m. N. E. by N. Montpelier.

EAST HARTFORD, t. and p. v., Hartford co., Conn.: on the E. side of Connecticut r., opposite to Hartford, with which it is connected by a bridge, and the Providence, Hartford, and Fishkill R. R. here crosses the r. The t. is drained chiefly by Hockanum r., which falls into the Connecticut, and affords extensive water-power. The land on the Connecticut is an alluvial meadow, very fertile; back of this it rises 15 or 20 feet to an extensive plain, and a causeway a mile long extends across the meadows to the bridge. The v. is pleasantly located on the plain, mostly on one broad street, shaded by lofty elms and other trees, the former in rows down the middle and the latter on its sides. East Hartford has long been noted for its manufactures and has still a considerable amount. The first powder-mill in the country was erected here in 1775. The present population of the t. amounts to 2,497 souls.

EAST HAWKICK, p. v., Barnstable co., Mass.: 72 m. S. E. Boston.

EAST HAVEN, t. and p. v., New Haven co., Conn.: on the E. side of New Haven Harbor, and on Long Island Sound, 87 m. S. by W. Hartford; and separated from New Haven by Quinnipiac r., over which there are bridges and railroad viaducts. Farm r. also runs through the town. The surface is generally level, and the soil light and sandy or sandy loam—to the E., however, it is hilly, and the soil a gravelly loam. The v. is pleasantly located and commands a fine prospect of Long Island Sound. It has some trade, and many of the inhabitants are engaged in coasting and fishing. The New Haven and New London R. R. passes through it. Population of the t. 1,673. A light-house stands on Five Mile Point, the E. side of the entrance to the harbor.

EAST HAVEN, t. and p. o., Essex co., Verm.: 46 m. N. E. by E. Montpelier. Drained by Paul's stream on the E., and on the W. by Passumus r. Surface mountainous and rugged, and but a small portion fit for cultivation. It is very sparsely settled. Pop. 94.

EASTON, p. v., and cap. Talbot co., Md.: on Treadhaven cr., 12 m. from its confluence with the estuary of Choptank r., 27 m. E. S. E. Annapolis. Lat. $36^{\circ} 46' 10''$ N., and long. $76^{\circ} 08'$ W. It is the largest and most populous v. of the eastern shore, and a place of considerable trade. It contains a C. H., a jail, a market-house, and 4 church edifices; and it has two newspapers, the "E. Gazette" (whig) and the "E. Star" (dem.), both issued weekly. Pop. 1,413.

EASTON, t. and p. v., Bristol co., Mass.: 24 m. S. Boston. Drained by affluents of Taunton r., on which are numerous establishments for cotton, wool, and iron manufactures. It is one of the most busy manufacturing towns in the State. The v. lies a little eastward of the centre of the t. P. 2,337.

EASTON, t. and p. v., Washington co., N. Y.: 24 m. N. by E. Albany. Drained by Battenkill and other creeks of Hudson r., which bounds it on the W. Surface diversified; soil, sandy and clayey loam. The v. lies on the Troy and Whitehall turnpike, and contains between 300 and 400 inhabitants. The t. has a pop. of 3,225.

EASTON, p. v., Wayne co., Ohio: 79 m. N. E. Columbus.

EASTON, p. b., and cap. Northampton co., Penn.: on the W. side of Delaware r., where it receives the Lehigh r., 93 m. E. N. E. Harrisburg. It is built on a point of land formed by the Delaware and Lehigh rivers and Bushkill cr. The streets are laid out along the cardinal points, crossing each other at right angles, and forming in the centre of the borough a square area, on which stands the court-house. The part of the v. on the Delaware is level, but considerably elevated above the river, and the ground rises gradually toward the W., to a considerable height. There are fine bridges and viaducts over all the streams above-mentioned.

Easton is the entrepôt of a vast internal commerce between the coal and iron fields of Pennsylvania and the Eastern markets, and will in time become an important point in the line of travel from East to West, being situated at the most eligible pass between the two sections. Already it is the terminus of several lines of railroad and of three canals, viz., the Morris Canal, the Lehigh Canal, and the Delaware Canal. Here terminates the New Jersey Central R. R., and also railroads coming from the western borders of Pennsylvania on Lake Erie, and from Pittsburg; and others are projected to Lake Ontario. The distance from New York to Erie via Easton, when the lines contemplated are completed, will be 463 miles and to Pittsburg 423.

As a business place Easton is one of the most prosperous towns of Pennsylvania. It will give some idea of the magnitude of its various interests, to state that there are within a radius of 3 miles of the place, 18 merchant and grist-mills, 6 saw-mills, 3 oil-mills, 3 tanneries, 5 foundries, 7 distilleries, 1 planing-mill and wire factory, 3 large blast furnaces, 2 cotton factories, and other smaller factories, all in full operation. At South Easton there is a vast water-power, sufficient for a great increase of manufactures; besides which the Lehigh r. has a fall of 200 feet between the Lehigh Water Gap and Easton, a distance of 25 miles, which would afford any additional water-power required.

The surrounding country is remarkable for the exquisite beauty of its natural scenery and its uncommon healthiness, as well as for its exceeding fertility and great advantages for manufactures, trade, and business. The excess of flour over and above the home consumption that is annually sent to market from Easton and its vicinity, exceeds 110,000 barrels, and 50,000 barrels of corn meal. At Easton alone during 1851, there were manufactured 90,000 barrels of flour, 14,000 barrels of whiskey, 3,000 tons of pig metal, and 800 tons refined iron. Immense deposits of the finest kinds of iron ore have been found in the vicinity, and no section of the United States is more favorably adapted to the successful manufacture of iron. In short, the position and resources of Easton are so favorable, and its growth so rapid, that nothing but the opening of the lines of railroad now projected is wanting to enable it to take a position among the most prosperous of our inland cities.

The borough is well supplied with the means of education and religious instruction. It has numerous Sabbath-schools and churches, and several primary and public schools, academies, etc.; and here is located Lafayette College, one of the best institutions of the State—manual labor forming a branch of its curriculum. This institution was founded in 1832; in 1850 it had a president, 7 professors, and 82 students; its alumni counted 101, of which 30 were in the ministry, and its library contained 5,000 volumes.

The press of Easton consists of 5 weekly newspapers, viz., the "Northampton Correspondent" (dem.), "Der Democrat" (Germ. dem.), the "E. Whig," the "E. Sentinel" (dem.), the "Independent Democrat," the "Eastonian" (whig), the "Northampton Courier" (dem.), and the "Democrat and Argus" (dem.)—all issued weekly.

The population of Easton in 1820 was 2,370; in 1830, 3,529; in 1840, 4,865, and in 1850.

EASTPORT, t. and p. v., Washington county, Me.: 144 m. E. by N. Augusta. The t. consists of Moose Island, 4 m. long (2,150 acres), and several smaller islands, viz., Dudley's, Frederick, and Patmos, in Passamaquoddy Bay. The v. of Eastport (lat. 44° 54' N., and long. 66° 56' W.) is on Moose Island, which is connected with Dennyville and Perry by bridges, and with Lubec by a ferry, and is but a short distance from the British islands—Indian and Campo Bello. It has a fine harbor in Passamaquoddy Bay, and the tide is here rapid, and rises 25 feet. It has a large lumber trade, and its trade with the neighboring provinces has long been very flourishing. In the fisheries and coasting it has also a large number of vessels engaged. The tonnage of Passamaquoddy Bay in 1850 was 19,985 tons, of which 10,531 tons were registered, 9,153 tons enrolled and licensed, and 272 tons licensed and under 20 tons. Of the enrolled and licensed tonnage, 7,385 tons were engaged in the coasting trade, 1,316 in the cod fishery, and 482 in the mackerel fishery. The steam tonnage amounted to 213 tons registered, and 648 tons enrolled and licensed. During the year 1849-50, 7,488 tons of shipping were built, viz., 13 ships, 8 brigs, 15 schooners, and 3 steamers. Clearances to foreign ports, 746 (63,367 tons), and entrances, 720 (58,453 tons). Much of the shipping built here is sold and exported. The population of the t. in 1850 was 4,125. A United States' garrison is maintained at this station, which is the most easterly of the Union, and nearest to the British territory.

EASTPORT, p. v., Tishemingo co., Miss.: on left bank of Tennessee r., and immediately W. of the mouth of Bear r., 208 m. N. E. Jackson. The Memphis and Charleston R. R. passes through the v., skirting the r. from Tusculumbia to the Tennessee State line.

EAST POULNEY, p. v., Rutland co., Verm.: 56 m. S. S. W. Montpelier. It contains several mechanic shops and about 65 dwellings.

ERIE county, N. Y. Situate W., and contains 876 sq. m. Surface generally level or undulating, except in the S., where it is somewhat hilly. Niagara r. and Lake Erie form its W. border, and Cattaraugus county makes its S. line. Drained by Buffalo, Cayuga, Cazenovia, Seneca, Ellicott's, Cauquaga, and Tonewanda creeks. Farms 4,880; manuf. 683; dwell. 17,104, and pop.—wh. 100,214, and fr. col. 773—total 100,998. Capital: Buffalo. Public Works: Erie Canal; Buffalo and Rochester R. R.; Buffalo and Niagara Falls R. R.; Buffalo and State Line R. R.; Buffalo and New York City R. R.; Buffalo and Brantford R. R.; Buffalo, Corning, and New York R. R., etc., and numerous plank roads.

ERIE county, Ohio. Situate N. on Lake Erie, and contains 324 sq. m. Drained by Huron and Vermillion rivers, and Pipe cr., the latter emptying into Sandusky Bay, and the two first into the lake. Surface generally level, and soils fertile. A large commerce centres in this co. Farms 1,021; manuf. 73; dwell. 3,362, and pop.—wh. 18,366, and fr. col. 202—total 18,563. Capital: Sandusky City. Public Works: Lake Shore R. R.; Sandusky and Toledo R. R.; Mad River and Lake Erie R. R.; Mansfield and Sandusky R. R., etc.

ERIE county, Penn. Situate in the N. W. corner of the State, facing on Lake Erie, and contains 720 sq. m. Drained by Conneaut, Elk, Walnut, and other creeks flowing into the Lake, and French cr. of the Allegheny r. Surface undulating; soils various, consisting of sandy loam, gravel, and clay in different proportions, and well adapted to grass. Farms 3,334; manuf. 255; dwell. 6,825, and pop.—wh. 33,593, fr. col. 149—total 33,742. Capital: Erie. Public Works: Erie and North-East R. R.; Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula R. R.; and Sunbury and Erie R. R.; also Beaver and Erie Canal. The two first of these form links in the great chain of railroads extending along the southern shore of Lake Erie.

ERIE, p. v., Whitesides co., Ill.: on the N. side of Rock r., 122 m. N. by W. Springfield.

ERIE, p. o., Roan county, Tenn.: 129 m. E. by S. Nashville.

ERIE, t. and p. v., Monroe co., Mich.: 84 m. S. E. Lansing. Drained by Yancey r. and Bay cr. The town is the southeasternmost in the State, and includes North Cape and several islands. It contains a good stone quarry. Pop. 1,144.

ERIE, p. v., and cap. Camden co., Mo.: on the S. side of Osage r., between the Little Niangua and Grand Au Glazier rivers, 43 m. S. W. Jefferson City. It contains a court-house, a jail, etc., and has a considerable river trade.

ERIE, p. b., port of entry, and cap. Erie co., Penn.: on Presque Isle Bay of Lake Erie, 218 m. N. W. by W. Harrisburg. Lat. 42° 10' N., and long. 80° 08' W. The borough extends along the bay for 3 m., and from it 1 m. The harbor of Erie is one of the best and safest on the Lake, with 8 or 10 feet of water on the bar, and the depth within it averages 20 feet. In extent it is about 6 sq. m. The borough contains the co. court-house, a jail, and other offices, churches of all denominations, schools and academies, a bank, numerous wholesale stores, commission and forwarding houses, and lumber yards; also foundries, mechanic shops, and manufacturing establishments of various kinds. Its pop. in 1840 was 3,412; in 1850 it contained 5,850; and in 1852, by estimate, 8,500. At the first period it had few facilities of internal communication—at the last, the line of railroads from Buffalo was completed, and also the line to Cleveland, thus extending its commercial highways to the extreme West and East of the Union. As yet, however, the prosperity of the borough is only in its first grade of development. Its harbor is being improved; the line of canal from Buffalo is progressing to completion; a railroad is being built to connect it with the Erie R. R. and New York City; another from Erie, via Sunbury to Philadelphia, in Pennsylvania; and still another to Pittsburgh. These lines of travel and transportation will place it on a par with Buffalo, Dunkirk, Cleveland, Sandusky, etc., and make it, in a commercial point of view, one of the most important ports of Lake Erie. The lake commerce centering at this port is as yet comparatively small, and the shipping owned by the inhabitants in 1850 was only 7,570 tons, of which 5,350 tons were navigated by steam-power. Favoring circumstances now compel the fortunes of the place, and its rise will be rapid; and it is not improbable that when the census enumeration of 1860 is taken, that Erie will count a population of nearly 20,000 inhabitants. The newspaper press of Erie consists of a tri-weekly paper and 4 weekly papers: the tri-weekly is the "Erie Observer" (dem.), of which also is issued a weekly edition; the "E. Chronicle" (whig), the "E. Gazette" (whig), and the "Commercial Advertiser" (whig). Erie has long been a port, the position and local advantages of which were appreciated by the lake navigator, and it has as long been a harbor of refuge to the national vessels in war or storm. It was here that Perry, in the last war with Great Britain, fluted up his fleet; and in case of war again ensuing, no port on the lake has the same advantages for defense and safe harbor, Presque Isle being a natural breast-work, easily defended against the enemy.

ERIE, lake: one of the five great lakes of North America, between the United States and Canada. It lies between 41° 22' and 42° 52' N. lat., and between 75° 55' and 83° 23' W. long., and has the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York on the S. and S. E. borders, and the fertile peninsula of Upper Canada on the N. Its shape is elliptical—its length 265 m., and its breadth from 10 to 63 m. It receives at its W. end, through the Detroit or strait, the discharge of water from the great upper lakes, and discharges its own waters through Niagara r., celebrated for its stupendous water-falls. Its surface is elevated 565 feet above tide water at Albany, 52 feet below lakes Huron and Michigan, and 322 feet above the level of Lake Ontario. Its waters are shallower than those of the other great lakes; the greatest depth that has been obtained by sounding is 270 feet, but its mean depth is not more than 120 feet. It receives from Canada but a few small streams, the principal of which is the Ouse, near its E. extremity. From Michigan it receives the Huron and Raisin; from Ohio, the Maumee Portage, Sandusky, Vermillion, Black, Cuyahoga, Grand Ashtabula, and Conneaut; from Pennsylvania, the Elk and other streams; and from New York, the Cattaraugus and Buffalo creeks. The rivers of Lake Erie have bars at their mouths, rarely affording more than 8 feet water. A little N. W. of Sandusky Bay is a group of islands called North, Middle, and South Bass islands. In the N. part of South Bass Island is Put-in-Bay, which has 12 feet water, and affords one of the best harbors on the lake, and is easily accessible. Into this harbor Commodore Perry brought his prizes after the battle of the 10th Sept., 1813. The best harbors on the south shore, are the harbor of Sandusky, Ohio; Erie, Penn.; and Buffalo and Black Rock, N. York. Port Maitland, at the mouth of Grand or Ouse r., forms the best and almost the only harbor on the Canada shore. Grand r., after a course of 100 miles, enters Lake Erie 40 m. directly W. of its outlet. In consequence of its shallowness, a part of the lake is frozen over in winter, and navigation is for several months suspended. The importance of this lake for the purposes of commerce has been greatly increased by the canals and railroads, connecting its ports with the interior and the sea-board. The canals are the Welland, the Erie, the Ohio, the Miami, and the Wabash and Erie canals; and the principal railroads are—the line of railroads from Buffalo to Albany; the New York and Erie R. R., from Dunkirk to New York City; the Sunbury and Erie R. R., from Erie to Sunbury and Philadelphia; the Cleveland and Pittsburgh R. R.; the Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R.; the line of railroads from Sandusky to Cincinnati; and the Southern Michigan R. R., from Toledo and Monroe to Chicago, etc.; and besides these, there is a continuous line of railroad from Niagara Falls, through Buffalo, Dunkirk, Erie, Cleveland, Sandusky, Toledo, etc., skirting the southern line of the lake from one end to the other, and connecting with the lines directing inland from these several ports. The business which is done on this lake by the aid of these channels is immense, and is constantly increasing. The following was the tonnage of the several collection districts on Lake Erie at two periods:

Buffalo	4,916	39,679	34,763
Presque Isle	3,360	7,570	4,510
Cuyahoga	9,514	35,315	25,801
Sandusky	2,643	7,328	4,685
Miami	2,232	2,629	397
Detroit	11,432	86,893	25,461
Total	34,097	129,714	95,617

This, in 1840, included more than 300 vessels, and in 1850 more than 1,100, consisting of ships, brigs, schooners, sloops, steamboats, and propellers. Of the vessels moved by steam-power, the number is great, and many of them of the largest class, little inferior to those navigating the Hudson River. In 1850, the tonnage of this description of vessels amounted to 53,199 tons, nearly one half the aggregate American tonnage on the lake. This enumeration does not include the tonnage of Canadian ports on the lake, which, however, is not large. The value of the commerce on this lake alone is much larger than that of the foreign commerce of the whole United States.

ERIEVILLE, p. v., Madison co., N. Y.: 102 m. W. Albany. Pop. about 200.

ERIN, p. v., Merriwether co., Ga.: on the N. line of the county, and about 6 m. W. of Flint r., 73 m. W. by N. Milledgeville.

ERIN, p. o., McHenry co., Ill.: 2 m. N. of Woodstock, and 151 N. N. E. Springfield.

ERIN, t. and p. o., Chemung co., N. Y.: 148 m. W. S. W. Albany. Drained by Cayuta cr. Surface hilly and broken, and soil gravelly loam of moderate fertility. It is almost entirely an agricultural town. Pop. 1,513.

ERIN, p. v., Chickasaw county, Miss.: 123 m. N. N. E. Jackson.

ERIN, p. o., Jasper co., Tex.: on the E. side of Neches r., 233 m. E. Austin City. The Jasper and Beaumont Road intersects the place about 14 m. above the S. line of the co.

ERIN SHADES, p. o., Henrico co., Virg.

ERROLL, t. and p. o., Coos co., N. Hamp.: 108 m. N. by E. Concord. Drained by Androscoggin r. and its tributaries. On the E. lies Lake Umbagog, which forms its boundary in that direction. The t. is entirely devoted to agriculture, and is very sparsely settled. Pop. 1,135.

ERVING, t. and p. v., Franklin co., Mass.: on the E. side of Connecticut r., 75 m. W. by N. Boston. Drained chiefly by Miller's r. Surface diversified with fine meadows on the Connecticut. Its streams afford fine water-power, and it has considerable manufactures. The Vermont and Massachusetts R. R. traverses the t. on the S. and W. borders, following the valleys of the rivers. Pop. 449.

ERWINNA, p. v., Bucks co., Penn.: on the right bank of Delaware river, 37 m. N. Philadelphia, and 113 m. E. Harrisburg.

ERWINTON, p. v., Barnwell dist., S. Car.: on the N. side of Briar cr., an affluent of Savannah r., 73 m. S. S. W. Columbia.

ESCAMBIA county, Flor. Situate in the extreme W., and contains 570 sq. m. Escambia r. and Pensacola Bay bound it on the E., and the Gulf of Mexico on the S., while the Perdido r. makes its W. line. Surface low and level near the sea, but rises to some height in the interior; it is drained by numerous tributaries of the border rivers. Soil generally poor, and covered with pines. Farms 34; manuf. 9; dwell. 563, and pop.—wh. 2,644, fr. col. 375, sl. 1,332—total 4,351. Capital: Pensacola. Public Works: Fort Gaines and Pensacola R. R.; Montgomery and Pensacola R. R.; Brunswick and Florida R. R., etc. (all projected).

ESCAMBIA river, Ala. and Flor.: rises in Monroe co., Alabama, and flows S. E. into Florida, where near the State line it unites with the Conecuh, a larger river than itself, and thence flows S. into an arm of Pensacola Bay. From the junction this stream is properly the Conecuh.

ESCALAPIA SPRINGS, p. v., Lewis co., Ky.: 92 m. E. by N. Frankfort.

ESMOND'S CORNERS, p. o., Calhoun co., Mich.: 53 m. S. W. Lansing.

ESM HILL, p. o., Paulding co., Ga.: 118 m. N. N. W. Milledgeville.

ESOPUS, t. and p. v., Ulster co., N. Y.: 57 m. S. by W. Albany. It has the Hudson r. on the E. and Rondout cr. on the N. W. side. Surface uneven and broken; soil, sandy clay and gravelly loam. The v. is located about 2 m. W. of the landing on the Hudson, and contains about 30 dwellings. Pop. of t. 2,572.

ESPERANCE, t. and p. v., Schoharie co., N. Y.: 30 m. W. Albany. Drained by creeks of Schoharie r., which bounds it on the E., and affords considerable water-power. The v. is located near the N. E. corner of the co. on the right bank of the river, and contains about 300 inhab. Pop. of t. 1,428.

ESPY, p. v., Columbia co., Penn.: on the right bank of Susquehanna r., 62 m. N. by E. Harrisburg. Pop. about 200.

ESPVILLE, p. v., Crawford co., Penn.: 195 m. N. W. Harrisburg.

ESSEX county, Mass. Situate N. E., and contains 365 sq. m. The Atlantic Ocean washes its E. line, and New Hampshire lies on its N. border. Drained by the Merrimac and Shawheen rivers. Surface uneven and rough, but the soil in many parts good, and always well cultivated. It has an extensive coast, good harbors, an active commerce and fishing interest, and great wealth, and in manufactures is one of the most productive in the State. Farms 2,816; manuf. 1,538; dwell. 18,573, and pop.—wh. 130,632, fr. col. 613—total 131,300. Capitals: Ipswich, Newburyport, and Salem. Public Works: Boston and Maine R. R.; Eastern R. R.; Newburyport R. R.; Salem and Lawrence R. R., etc.

ESSEX county, N. Jer. Situate toward the N. E., and contains 241 sq. m. Drained by tributaries of the Passaic r., by the Rahway r., and some others. Two chains of hills pass through it, and make its surface uneven and rough; soils generally red shale. It has immense hydraulic power and extensive manufactures. Farms 1,745; manuf. 586; dwell. 10,964, and pop.—wh. 71,738, fr. col. 2,161, and sl. 6—total 73,550. Capital: Newark. Public Works: Morris Canal; and Essex R. R.; New Jersey R. R., etc.

ESSEX county, N. Y. Situate N. E., and contains 1,779 sq. m. Surface hilly in the E., and mountainous in the W. Mount Marcy, the highest culmination, rises to the height of 5,467 feet above the level of the sea. Lake Champlain lies on its E. border, along which is some good land. It is one of the richest mining counties of the State, abounding in iron ores, copper, manganese, etc. Farms 1,572; manuf. 199; dwell. 5,321, and pop.—wh. 31,093, and fr. col. 50—total 31,148. Capital: Elizabethtown. Public Works: Plattsburg and Whitehall R. R. (projected), etc.

ESSEX county, Verm. Situate N. E. in the corner of the State, and contains 226 sq. m. Drained by streams of the Connecticut, St. Lawrence, and Lake Memphremagog. The Connecticut makes its E. line. Surface rough; soils generally poor, except in the river valleys. The county abounds in fine timber. Potatoes and oats are the chief products. Farms 602; manuf. 32; dwell. 846, and pop.—wh. 6,647, fr. col. 3—total 4,650. Capital: Guild Hall. Public Works: Atlantic and St. Lawrence R. R., etc.

ESSEX county, Virg. Situate E., and contains 230 sq. m. Drained by tributaries of the Rappahannock r., which makes its N. E. border. Surface somewhat uneven; soil, except on the streams, sandy, and not of average fertility. Its products are the grains, with some cotton and tobacco. Farms 328; manuf. 17; dwell. 725, and pop.—wh. 3,025, fr. col. 419, sl. 6,762—total 10,206. Capital: Tappahannock.

ESSEX, p. b., Middlesex co., Conn.: on the W. side of Connecticut r., 7 m. from its mouth, and 31 m. S. S. E. Hartford. It is engaged in ship-building, and has a considerable coasting trade. Pop. about 1,000.

ESSEX, t. and p. v., Essex co., Mass.: 27 m. N. E. Boston. Drained by Chebacco r. and other streams emptying into Squam Bay. The village lies near the centre of the town, and has about 350 inhabitants. Many small vessels are built in Essex, and numbers are employed in coasting and the fisheries. The manufactures of the town consist chiefly of boots and shoes, barrels, cordage, etc. Pop. 1,585.

ESSEX, t. and p. o., Clinton co., Mich.: 23 m. N. by W. Lansing. Drained by creeks of Maple r., on which there are several salt-works. Pop. 410.

ESSEX, t. and p. v., Essex co., N. Y.: 103 m. N. by E. Albany. Drained by Boquet and other creeks of Lake Champlain, which makes its E. border. The village is located on the lake shore, and has a good steamboat landing, etc. It is a place of considerable trade, with warehouses, stores, a ship-yard, and about 100 dwellings. The town is chiefly agricultural. Pop. 2,311.

ESSEX, p. o., Fulton county, Ohio: 131 m. N. W. by N. Columbus.

ESSEX, t. and p. v., Chittenden co., Verm.: 31 m. W. N. W. Montpelier. Drained in the S. by Onion r., and in the N. by Brown's r., a branch of Lamoille r. It has also several smaller streams. At Hubbell's Falls, on Onion r., are admirable mill-sites, at which considerable manufacturing operations are carried on. Surface varied by hill and dale: soil in the S. and W. sandy, and covered with pine—in other parts a sandy and clay loam, with hard wood, and fertile. Along Onion r. are some tracts of beautiful intervals. The village near the centre contains about 20 dwellings. In the S. W. there is a new village, called Essex Junction, where the Burlington Branch diverges from the main line of the Vermont Central R. R. Pop. of t. 2,097.

ESTELVILLE, p. v., Atlantic co., N. Jer.: 51 m. S. by E. Trenton.

ESTILL county, Ky. Situate E. centrally, and contains 463 sq. m. Drained by creeks of Kentucky r., which flows through it in a north-west direction. The surface is rough and well-wooded, and the soils produce the usual staples of the State abundantly. Coal and iron are also staples, and are produced and worked successfully. Farms 604; manuf. 2; dwell. 934, and pop.—wh. 5,563, fr. col. 6, sl. 411—total 5,985. Capital: Irvine.

ESTILL'S MILLS, p. o., Platte co., Mo.: 152 m. W. N. W. Jefferson City.

ESTILVILLE, p. v., and cap. Scott co., Virg.: on Moccasin cr. of the N. fork of Holston r., 292 m. W. S. W. Richmond. It contains a court-house and other co. offices, and about 40 dwellings.

ETHERIDGE, p. o., Jones co., Ga.: 23 m. W. Milledgeville.

ETNA, t. and p. v., Penobscot county, Me.: 49 m. N. E. Augusta. Drained by a branch of Sebasticook r. Surface diversified: soil of average fertility, producing excellent wheat. The village lies on the line of the Kennebec and Penobscot R. R. Pop. of t. 802.

ETNA, p. o., Lapeer co., Mich.: 66 m. E. N. E. Lansing.

ETNA, p. v., Tompkins county, N. Y.: on the right bank of Fall cr., 131 m. W. by S. Albany. It has about 250 inhabitants.

ETNA, t. and p. v., Licking co., Ohio: 16 m. E. Columbus. Drained by S. fork of Licking r. The village is located on the National Road. Pop. of t. 1,307.

ETNA CENTRE, p. o., Penobscot co., Me.: 47 m. N. E. Augusta.

ETOWAH, p. o., Cass co., Ga.: on Etowah r., a constituent of the Coosa, 123 m. N. W. Milledgeville.

ETOWAH river, Ga.: one of the main constituents of Coosa r. It rises in Franklin co., and sweeps southerly through Cherokee and Cass counties, and into Floyd co., where it unites with the Oostanaula r., forming together the Coosa, a river of Alabama.

EUBANKS, p. o., Columbia county, Ga.: 69 m. E. N. E. Milledgeville.

EUCLID, p. v., Onondaga co., N. Y.: S. of the outlet of Oneida Lake, 126 m. W. by N. Albany.

EUCLID, t. and p. v., Cuyahoga county, Ohio: 132 m. N. E. by N. Columbus. Drained by creeks falling into Lake Erie, which washes its N. limits. Surface broken, and much of the soil of only average fertility. The village is located on the line of the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula R. R. Pop. of t. 1,447.

EUFULA, p. v., Barbour co., Ala.: on the W. side of Chattahoochee r., at the mouth of Eufaula cr., 73 m. E. S. E. Montgomery.

EUGENE, p. v., Vermillion co., Ind.: on the right bank of Big Vermillion r., about 3 m. above its confluence with Wabash r., and 70 m. W. by N. Indianapolis. It has a town-hall and several stores, with a population numbering 300 souls.

EUHARLEY, p. v., Cass county, Ga.: 123 m. N. W. Milledgeville.

EULOGY, p. o., Holmes county, Miss.: 60 m. N. by E. Jackson.

EUPHEMIA, p. o., Preble county, Ohio: 92 m. W. by S. Columbus.

EUREKA, p. v., Trinity co., Calif.: on the E. side of the N. division of Humboldt's Bay, 180 m. N. N. W. Vallejo.

EUREKA, p. v., Winnebago co., Wis.: 78 m. N. N. E. Madison.

EUREKA MILLS, p. o., Green co., Ohio: 53 m. W. S. W. Columbus.

EUTAW, p. v., and cap. Green co., Ala.: about 3 m. W. of Black Warrior r., and 96 m. W. N. W. Montgomery. It contains a court-house and about 30 dwellings, and is situated in the midst of a fine elevated cotton region.

EUTAW, p. o., De Soto co., Miss.: 182 m. N. Jackson.

EUTAW SPRINGS, Charleston dist., S. Car.: a small affluent of Santee r., on the borders of which was fought the famous battle of Eutaw Springs, 8th September, 1781, between the Americans, under General Greene, and the British, under General Stewart. American loss, 555, and British loss, about 1,000.

EVANS, t. and p. v., Erie co., N. Y.: 281 m. W. Albany. Drained by Little and Big Sisters' creeks, flowing into Lake Erie, which makes its W. border. Surface hilly: soil gravelly loam and clay, adapted to the growth of grain and the grasses. The village is located on the lake, and has a good landing. Pop. of the town 2,152.

EVANSBURGH, p. b., Crawford county, Penn.: 208 m. N. W. by W. Harrisburg.

EVANSBURGH, p. v., Coshocton co., Ohio: on the N. side of Tuscarawas r., and on the line of the Ohio Canal, 73 m. E. N. E. Columbus. It has a fine commercial position, and contains several warehouses, stores, and about 120 dwellings. Pop. 800.

EVANS' MILLS, p. o., Chatham co., N. Car.: 23 m. W. Raleigh.

EVANSVILLE, p. v., Defiance co., Ohio: on the W. bank of Tiffin r., 122 m. N. W. Columbus. Pop. 165.

EVANSVILLE, p. v., Rock county, Wis.: 32 m. S. S. E. Madison.

EVANSVILLE, p. v., Washington co., Ark.: 143 m. W. N. W. Little Rock.

EVANSVILLE, p. city, and cap. Vanderburgh co., Ind.: on the high N. bank of the Ohio r., 200 m. from its mouth, and 144 m. S. S. W. Indianapolis. It is the S. terminus of the Wabash and Erie Canal, and also of the Evansville and Illinois R. R.—two facts which make it an important point at which a large commerce must necessarily concentrate; it is by far the largest town and the greatest depôt for produce, merchandize, and travelers on the whole line of the Ohio r., between Louisville and its mouth, a distance of 400 miles. In 1850 the exports and imports of the port amounted to $7,000,000, and the arrival and departures of steamboats to 5,393. This was before the completion of the canal and railroad. It contains the courts and offices of the co., a branch of the State Bank, the U. S. Marine Hospital, a market house, with numerous churches, hotels, warehouses, stores, etc., and about 6,000 inhabitants. The public press of the city consists of two daily, one tri-weekly, and three weekly newspapers, two of the weeklies being editions of the dailies. The dailies are the "E. Journal," and the "E. Republican;" the tri-weekly, the "Auzetizer;" and the weeklies, the "Vanderburg Democrat," etc. The vast deposits of coal on the line of the canal will make Evansville, its terminus, one of the best points for fuel on the western waters.

EVANSVILLE, p. v., Jefferson co., N. Y.: on the left side of Indian r., 138 m. N. W. Albany. There are large mills at this place and vicinity. The projected Watertown and Potsdam R. R. will intersect it.

EVANSVILLE, p. v., Randolph co., Ill.: on the E. side of Kaskaskia River, 1 m. below Nine Mile cr., and 120 m. S. Springfield.

EVANSVILLE, p. v., Preston co., Virg.: between Cheat and Valley rivers, 136 m. N. W. Richmond.

EVESING SHADE, p. o., Lawrence county, Ark.: 123 m. N. N. E. Little Rock.

EVERETT'S SPRING, p. o., Floyd county, Ga.: 142 m. N. W. by N. Milledgeville.

EVERGREEN, p. v., Conecuh co., Ala.: on an E. branch of Murder cr. of Conecuh r., 73 m. S. S. W. Montgomery. The line of the Montgomery and Mobile R. R. will probably pass near or through this place.

EVERITTSVILLE, p. v., Wayne co., N. Car.: 49 m. S. E. Raleigh.

EVERTON, p. v., Fayette county, Ind.: 58 m. E. by S. Indianapolis.

EWING, p. v., Hocking co., Ohio: 42 m. S. E. Columbus.

EXETER, p. v., Scott co., Ill.: on the S. side of Mauvaisceterre cr. of Illinois r., 47 m. W. by S. Springfield. It has several large mills and about 200 inhabitants. The site is one of the pleasantest in the State, and the surrounding country in a flourishing condition.

EXETER, L. and p. v., Penobscot co., Me.: 59 m. N. E. by N. Augusta. Drained in the N. and E. by Kenduskeag r., and in the S. by tributaries of the Sebasticook. Surface diversified: soil fertile, and productive of excellent wheat. The village lies a little N. of the centre of the town, and is a small agricultural settlement. Pop. 1,553.

EXETER, t., p. v., and cap. Rockingham co., N. Hamp.: 32 m. E. S. E. Concord. Drained by tributaries of Piscataqua r.; surface level, and soil various, but in general of average fertility. The village lies on Squamscot or Exeter r., at the falls, at the head of tide water. Here is much valuable water-power, and vessels of considerable tonnage can approach to the foot of the falls. It contains a courthouse, a jail, and other co. buildings, several churches and schools, among which is Phillips' Academy, founded and endowed by John Phillips, LL.D., in 1751, and at which many of the ablest jurors, statesmen, and literati of the State have received their early education. The town contains numerous manufacturing establishments, and has a newspaper, the "Exeter News-Letter," published weekly. The Boston and Maine R. R. passes through the place 50 m. from Boston. Pop. of town 3,329.

The settlement of Exeter was commenced in 1683 by John Wheelwright and his companions, who formed themselves into a body politic, chose their own magistrates, and bound the people to obedience. Their laws were made in popular assemblies, and the combination thus entered into subsisted about three years.

EXETER, t. and p. v., Otsego co., N. Y.: 64 m. W. by N. Albany. Drained by Butternut and Wharton's creeks, and Canaderaga Lake lies on its N. E. line. Surface elevated and hilly; soil, calcareous mold, well adapted for grain-growing. The village, near the centre of the town, contains a church and about 20 dwellings. Pop. of town 1,526.

EXETER, t. and p. o., Monroe co., Mich.: 73 m. S. E. Lansing. Drained by Stoney cr. Soil well adapted to grain and grasses. Pop. 453.

EXETER, t. and p. o., Luzerne co., Penn.: 97 m. N. E. by N. Harrisburg. Surface uneven; soil excellent. Drained by Gardner's cr. and Cascade Run, affluents of the Susquehanna r. Shawney Ridge passes through it; on the E. side anthracite abounds. In the S. part of this town the famous battle of Wyoming was fought in 1775. Campbell's "Gertrude of Wyoming" celebrates the horrors of the scene and circumstance. Pop. about 1,800.

EXETER, t. and p. v., Greene co., Wis.: 21 m. S. S. W. Madison. The village is located on the W. side of Sugar cr., an affluent of Rock River. Pop. of t. 450.

EXETER, t. and p. v., Washington county, R. I.: 22 m. S. S. W. Providence. Drained by Wood r. and its branches. Surface diversified by hills and valleys; soil gravely loam and productive. The streams furnish fine water-power, which is extensively used for manufacturing purposes. The village is a small settlement east of the middle of the town. Pop. of town 1,635.

FAIRFIELD, t., p. v., port of entry, and cap. Fairfield co., Conn.: 56 m. S. W. Hartford. Drained by Mill r. and other streams falling into Long Island Sound, which bounds it on the S. Surface pleasantly undulating; soil fertile and well cultivated, producing grain and a large amount of garden vegetables. The t. is divided into 3 parishes, Fairfield, Green's Farms, and Greenfield, which are also names of villages. The principal v. lies about 1½ m. from Black Rock Harbor, which, next to that of New London, is one of the best on the Sound: it is built chiefly on one street, with a green or square in the centre, and contains a court-house, jail, and about 140 dwellings, and has several stores and mechanic shops. Greenfield is pleasantly situate in the N. W. part of the town, and is the scene of Dr. Dwight's fine poem of "Greenfield Hill." Fairfield is the port of entry of Fairfield District, and in 1850 owned a tonnage of 24,829 tons, of which 865 tons were of permanent register, and the remainder enrolled and licensed, the latter engaged in the coasting trade. The foreign entrances in 1849-50 were 10 vessels, and 6,895 tons; and the clearances, 56 vessels, and 6,822 tons; and one ship of 239 tons was built in the same year. There is a light-house on Fairweather Island, a little E. of the entrance to the harbor. Pop. of t. 3,618. The Indian name of Fairfield was "Unquowa." The v. was destroyed by Governor Tryon in 1779, as was also the v. of Green's Farms. The New York and New Haven R. R. passes through it.

FALL RIVER, t., p. v., and port of entry, Bristol co., Mass.: 46 m. S. Boston. Drained by streams falling into Taunton r. and Mount Hope Bay, a branch of Narraganset Bay. Surface elevated, rough, and uneven. The t. takes its name from Fall r., the outlet of Watuppa Pond, at the union of which with Taunton r. the great manufacturing village of Fall River is located. This t. is without a parallel on the American Continent in regard to its combined facilities for navigation and hydraulic power. Fall r. rises 2 m. E. of the v. in Watuppa Pond, which is 11 m. long and 1 m. broad, originating in perennial springs. The descent of the r. to Taunton r. is 136 feet, and the volume of water constant and of sufficient power for the largest manufactures. The harbor on Taunton r. is safe and easy of access, and of depth sufficient for the largest ships. It is one of the great manufacturing centres of the State, and has extensive cotton mills, woolen factories, print-works, bleacheries, boot and shoe factories, foundries, etc., etc.; it has also several banks and insurance offices. In 1849-50, the foreign entrances were 73 vessels (12,739 tons); and clearances, 37 vessels (5,479 tons). It has also a large coasting trade, and is engaged in the whale and other fisheries. The tonnage owned in the district in 1850 was 13,102 tons, of which 2,251 tons were registered, 10,748 enrolled and licensed, and 103 licensed (under 20 tons). In the whale fisheries there were 925 tons employed, in coasting, 10,701 tons, and in the cod fishery, 47 tons; and the shipping propelled by steam amounted to 4,784 tons; and 1 ship, 3 schooners, and 1 steamer (in the aggregate 1,254 tons), were built in the year next preceding. The port is connected with New York by a regular steam line, and with Boston by the Fall River R. R., etc. Two newspapers, the "Weekly News" (dem.), and the "F. R. Monitor," are issued weekly, circulating 700 to 800 copies each. Pop. in 1820, 1,594; in 1830, 4,159; in 1840, 6,738; and in 1850, 11,522.

THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

FLORIDA, the most southerly of the Atlantic States, consists of a long, narrow strip on the northern shore of the Gulf of Mexico, extending from the Atlantic coast to the River Perdido, and of a vast peninsula, 320 miles in length, and about 150 miles broad, separating the Gulf of Mexico from the Atlantic Ocean. It lies generally between latitudes 25° and 31° north, and between longitudes 80° and 57° 45' west from Greenwich, or 2° 55' and 10° 43' west from Washington, and comprises within its limits an area estimated at 53,786 square miles.

The southern portion of Florida, from about 25° N. latitude, is an extensive marsh, which during the rainy season, between June and October, effectually prevents an overland passage from one shore to the other. North of this tract to Georgia, the surface of the country is generally a dead level, but in some parts it is undulating, and even presents some eminences worthy the name of hills. The face of the country, west of the neck of the peninsula, is somewhat more uneven, but it contains no considerable elevations.

The Great Southern Marsh contains numerous tracts of pine land, prairies, and hummocks, and the more northerly part of the peninsula consists chiefly of fine forests, interspersed with hummocks, prairies, and marshes. The soil is generally sandy, except in the hummocks, in which it is clay, mixed with sand. These hummocks are scattered throughout the country, and vary in extent from a few acres to thousands, but forming in the aggregate only a small portion of the whole surface. They are covered with a growth of red, live, and water oak, dog-wood, magnolia and pine, and afford, when cleared, excellent arable land. The prairies, or savannahs, as they are here called, are sometimes pretty extensive, stretching for several miles in length and breadth, and forming natural pastures. The barrens are overgrown with pine forests, with little underwood, and though the soil is generally indifferent, it is sometimes productive. The swamps or morasses, which form so conspicuous a feature in the country, are either formed by the inundations of the rivers, which, overflowing the high-wooded ridge that forms their banks, cover the lowlands in the rear with water, or they are produced by the drainage of the surrounding country; the latter, or pine-baren swamps, are overgrown with pine, cypress, and cypress knees; and the former, or river swamps, are covered with a heavy growth of various timber.

The rivers of Florida are numerous, and they afford valuable navigable channels. The St. John's rises in the Great Southern Marsh, and reaches the ocean after a northerly course of nearly 300 miles, in lat. 30° 20' north; for nearly 100 miles from its mouth it forms a wide, sluggish sheet of water, more resembling a lagoon than a river, and it is navigable to Lake George, a little higher up, for vessels drawing 8 feet of water. Indian River is a long lagoon, having much the same character, and communicating with the ocean by Indian River Outlet. Charlotte and Amaxura are the principal rivers on the western side of the peninsula, the whole of which, south of the St. John's and Suwanee, contains only small streams. The Suwanee is formed by the junction of the Withlacoochee and Little St. John's from Georgia, and reaches the Gulf at Vacasasa Bay; its bar has only 6 feet water at high tide. The Ocklockonee also rises in Georgia, and flows into Appalachicola Bay. The Appalachicola, formed on the frontier of Florida by the junction of the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers, falls into the bay of the same name, after a course of 75 miles, and is navigable for steamboats throughout its whole length. The Choctawatchee, rising in Alabama, flows into the bay of its name, and the Escambia into Pensacola Bay. The St. Mary's forms in part the northern boundary, and is a fine navigable stream.

FLORIDA.

Florida has a sea-coast of more than 1,000 miles in length, but so much of it is rendered inaccessible by soundings, that it has few good harbors. West of Cape San Blas the shore is bold, but east of that point it begins to shallow. From Apalachee Bay to Tampa Bay the whole coast sends off shallow banks, and from Wacasa Bay to the Amaxura there are but six or seven feet of water six miles from shore; to the south of Carlos Bay the shores are bolder. On the eastern side there is no harbor south of San Augustine, and scarcely an inlet breaks the coast from that point to Cape Florida.

South from the mainland, a chain of small rocky islands, named cayos or keys, extends to the westward, ending in a cluster of rocks and sand-banks, called the Tortugas, or Dry Tortugas. South of the bank upon which these keys rise, and separated from them by a navigable channel, is a long, narrow coral reef, known as the Florida Reef. The most important of these keys is Key West, a nautical corruption or free translation of Cayo Hueso (Bone Key), also called Thompson's Island. Long the haunt of smugglers and pirates, it is now a naval station of the first importance, and the seat of bands of wreckers, whose business is to assist vessels in distress; and a special court is here established to adjust salvages. The marine disasters occurring in this vicinity are frequent; the number of vessels which put into the port of Key West in distress, in 1850, and which had been ashore on the reef, was thirty, valued with their cargoes at $929,000, and on these the salvage and charges amounted to $200,860. This key is about six miles in length by two in breadth, with a large, well-sheltered, and commodious harbor, which admits the largest vessels. The salt ponds, on the key, have of late years yielded considerable quantities of salt, and are very valuable to those engaged in the manufacture. The Tortugas derive their name from the immense number of turtles that visit them and the adjacent keys and mainland for the purpose of depositing their eggs. The turtles here are of several kinds, and form an article of considerable traffic.

The whole of the peninsula is of diluvial formation. The substratum of the eastern part is clay mixed with sand, but that of the western is a kind of rotten limestone, which in many places is undermined by subterranean streams, forming numerous cavities in the ground, called "sinks." These sinks are inverted conical hollows, varying in size from a few yards to several acres, at the bottom of which running water often appears. The central district is the most productive; but even of this district a large portion is composed of poor pine-barrens, yet in the midst of these are found gentle eminences of fertile land, supporting a vigorous growth of oaks and hickories, while numerous rivulets of pure water flow through the country, or expand into beautiful lakes. Farther west the land is more generally poor. Thus it appears that but a comparatively small portion of Florida can be said to be available for cultivation, yet the warmth and humidity of the climate compensate in a great measure for the stubborn nature of the soil, and give it a vegetation of great variety and luxuriance.

The productions, natural and agricultural, of Florida, are chiefly those which require a tropical sun to mature their fruits. It is not, however, merely in tropical products that Florida possesses advantages over every other State of the Union: it is now established beyond a doubt that the Sea Island, or long staple cotton (the production of which was formerly confined to a few small islands in South Carolina and Georgia) will grow luxuriantly even in the very centre of the peninsula. A fine quality of this staple has also been produced on the Suwanee, and in the very centre of the Alachua, as well as on the eastern coast. This important fact is no doubt attributable to the almost insular position of the State. The soils are also adapted to the successful cultivation of the coffee plant, also cocoa, the sugar-cane, cottons generally, Cuba and other tobaccos, rice, indigo, arrow-root, Sisal hemp, New Zealand flax, etc., and the climate is suitable for the cochineal insect and silk-worm; corn, potatoes, turnips, and, in short, most of the vegetables known to the North or South, find in one or other locality congenial soils. The fruits produced are too numerous to recount, and of the most delicate descriptions: oranges, lemons, limes, pine-apples, olives, grapes, etc., flourish luxuriantly, and if properly attended to, would soon become valuable export staples. As matters stand at the present time, indeed, Florida supplies much of the tropical fruit found in the markets of our northern cities. It has every delicacy of vegetable culture, and at all seasons of the year; beets, onions, egg-plants, carrots, lettuce, celery, cauliflowers, etc., are produced with the most indifferent culture; and water-melons, cantelopes, pumpkins, cucumbers, and every thing that grows upon vines are in abundance and in great perfection. The driest seasons are relieved by heavy dews, and the sun that would bake the earth in other States, and wither the vegetation, is here so tempered by the prevailing moisture as to force the development of vegetable life to the utmost, and envelop the earth in perennial verdure.

The climate of Florida has been spoken of, and justly, as one of the finest; and, aside from the miasms that arise from the swamps, as one of the most salubrious in the world. In the south the temperature scarcely changes the year round, and summer is only distinguished by the copiousness of its showers. No more delightful residence for invalids can be found than Key West, where the difference of the mean temperature of summer and winter is not more than 11° Fahr. And what is said of Key West will equally apply to other portions of Southern Florida: Miami, on Key Biscayne Bay, has a climate at once placid and constant, and presents to the invalid of the North a desirable retreat from the rude blasts peculiar to that region; and were suitable accommodations prepared for their reception at the points indicated, numbers of those who now annually go to Cuba and the other West India Islands, would be induced to stop short on their voyage, and try the advantages of so delightful a home climate. The average mean temperature of the State generally is about 73°, and in no place does the difference between summer and winter exceed 25°. The mean average quantity of rain during the year is 33 inches.

The grassy prairies of this country afford excellent pasturage, and have long been feeding grounds of the southern grazer; immense herds of cattle are constantly roaming over these, requiring no care from their owners, nor housing on account of the colds of winter; and in most parts of the State hogs thrive well and fatten without any other support than that which they derive from the abundant roots and mast of the country. And there is certainly no portion of the United States where game and fish are so abundant as in Florida. The fact that a large body of Indians supported themselves well for the space of seven years, while hunted themselves by an army of 6,000 men, is some evidence in proof of this assertion. It was common before the war for a good hunter to kill seven or eight deer of a day, and multitudes of these animals were slaughtered merely for their skins. The country abounds also in wild turkeys, partridges, geese, ducks, curlews, and various other species of smaller game. The whole coast is productive of the finest fish, and the oysters especially are of excellent flavor. Sheep-head, grouper, red-fish, mullet, green turtle, etc., are to be found in inexhaustible abundance at almost every point, both on the eastern and western coasts; and the numerous lakes, rivers, and creeks of the interior teem with fresh-water fish, and the most delicious species of soft-shelled turtle, etc. On many parts of the coast sponges are found, and in this product the trade is constantly increasing.

FLORIDA.

Florida contains 28 counties, the general statistics of which, and the capitals of each in 1850, were as follows:

The industry of Florida is devoted almost wholly to agriculture and commerce, the manufactures of the State as yet being of small account, and consisting of such branches only as those the position of the inhabitants immediately demands. None of the great national manufactures have yet been introduced, and hence manufactured goods of almost every description are imported from the Northern States and exchanged for the indigenous agricultural staples of the soil—an exchange creating a large commercial movement between the different sections of the Union, and in the interior of the State itself. The statistics of the wealth and industry of the State, as furnished by the census of 1850, and other official returns, are as follows:

Occupied Lands, etc.—Improved lands, 349,049 acres, and unimproved lands, 1,236,240 acres—valued in cash at $6,323,109. Whole number of farms under cultivation, 4,304. Value of farming implements and machinery, $658,795.

Live-Stock.—Horses, 10,843; asses and mules, 5,002; milch cows, 72,576; working oxen, 5,794; other cattle, 182,415; sheep, 23,311; and swine, 209,453—valued in the aggregate at $2,880,058. (In 1840 there were 12,043 horses, mules, etc.; and 118,080 neat-cattle of all kinds; 7,198 sheep, and 92,680 hogs.)

Grain Crops.—Wheat, 1,027 bushels; rye, 1,152 bushels; Indian corn, 1,996,869 bushels; oats, 66,586 bushels; barley, 0 bushels; and buckwheat, 55 bushels. (The crops of 1839-40 were—wheat, 412 bushels; barley, 30 bushels; oats, 18,829 bushels; rye, 305 bushels; buckwheat, 0 bushels; and Indian corn, 898,974 bushels.)

Other Crops.—Rice, 1,075,090 pounds; tobacco, 998,614 pounds; ginned cotton, 45,131 bales of 400 pounds; peas and beans, 185,359 bushels; Irish potatoes, 7,823 bushels; sweet potatoes, 757,226 bushels; hay, 2,510 tons; clover-seed, 0; and other grass-seed, 2 bushels; hops, 14 pounds; hemp, dew-rotted, 0 tons, and water-rotted, 0 tons; flax, 50 pounds; flax-seed, 0 bushels; maple sugar, 0 pounds; cane sugar, 2,752 hogsheds of 1,000 pounds; molasses, 352,593 gallons; wine, 10 gallons, etc. The value of orchard products was $1,200, and of market-garden products, $8,721. The annexed table will exhibit the staple crops of 1840 and 1850 comparatively:

Products of Animals.—Wool, 23,247 (in 1840, 7,285) pounds; butter, 371,493 pounds; cheese, 18,015 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered during the year had been $514,685. Silk cocoons were produced to the amount of 6 (in 1840, 124) pounds, and beeswax and honey, to that of 18,971 pounds.

Home-made manufactures for the year ending 30th June, 1850, were valued at $75,582. (In 1840, $20,205).

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested, $1,209,107; value of raw material, fuel, etc., used and consumed, $412,030; average number of hands employed, 1,192—males, 1,112, and females, 80; average monthly cost of labor—male, $37,216, and female, $9,872; annual value of products, $962,114. The whole number of manufacturing establishments, according to the annual value of $500 and upward, was one hundred and twenty-one.

FLORIDA.

Commerce.—Florida, in the year ending 30th June, 1850, exported to foreign countries to the value of $2,623,624, of which amount $2,607,968 represented domestic produce, and $15,656 foreign merchandise re-exported. The proportion of the total value of domestic produce carried in foreign bottoms, was $1,493,999—the remainder in national vessels. The foreign imports for the same year amounted in value to $95,709, of which $30,241 was carried in American, and $65,468 in foreign vessels. The greatest portion of the exports are cleared from Appalachicola, which is also the outlet of Eastern Alabama, and South-western Georgia, whence produce is brought down the river in steamboats. The shipping entered at all the ports of the State amounted to 17,980 tons, of which was foreign 10,462 tons; and the shipping cleared, to 22,156, of which was foreign 12,134 tons. The tonnage owned in the several collection districts of the State, was as follows :

The coasting trade of Florida is immensely larger than its direct foreign trade, and employs a large tonnage both of steam and sail vessels. Of the cotton exported in 1851, 70,547 bales were sent direct to foreign ports, and 111,532 coastwise, and so with other staples—which facts illustrate the course of Florida commerce. The statistics of the foreign commerce of the State for a series of years, exhibit the following movements :

Internal Communication.—Florida, beyond those provided by nature, has but few means of internal communication. In the south there are several military roads to depend on; and in the north, where greater progress has been made in the settlement of the country, there are some short railroads, and more progress has been made in opening inter-communication by ordinary roads. There are, however, several public works of great importance to the prosperity of the State projected; one of which, the Ship Canal, or railroad across the neck of the peninsula, will be of vital importance to the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico; and the railroads from Savannah and Brunswick to Appalachicola, will also be the means of opening up the southern parts of Georgia to the Floridian Gulf ports. There is also a railroad projected from some point on the St. Mary's River to Pensacola.

Government.—The constitution of Florida provides that all free white male citizens, twenty-one years of age, who shall have resided in the State two years, and in the county six months next preceding, shall be eligible to vote at elections.

The Legislature, styled the General Assembly, consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. Representatives are elected for one year, and senators for two years. Representation is apportioned every ten years according to population, three-fifths of the slaves being counted in the representative numbers. The general election takes place on the first Monday of October, and the Assembly meets biennially on the third Monday in November.

The governor is elected by a plurality of votes for four years, and is ineligible for the four years next after. He must be at least thirty years of age, and have been ten years a citizen of the United States, or an inhabitant of Florida at the adoption of the constitution, and a resident thereof for five years next before the election. The governor has a qualified veto on all legislative acts. In case of the disability or death of the governor, first, the President of the Senate, and second, the Speaker of the House of Representatives act in his stead for such part of the term as may be unexpired.

No officer in a banking company, while he serves in a bank, or for twelve months afterward, shall be eligible for the office of governor, senator, or representative; nor shall a duelist or second in a duel hold any office under the State. The Secretary of State is elected by the Legislature for four years.

The Judiciary consists of a Supreme Court, Circuit Courts, and several courts of minor jurisdiction. The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction only, and is composed of a chief justice and two associate justices. It holds four sessions annually—one at Tallahassee, on the first Monday of January; one at Jacksonville, on the third Monday of February; one at Tampa, on the first Monday of March; and one at Marianna, on the third Monday of March. When one or two of the judges are disqualified from sitting in any cause, the vacancy is filled by a corresponding number of circuit judges. For the purpose of holding Circuit Courts, the State is divided into four circuits, viz., the Western, the Middle, the Eastern, and the Southern, to each of which there is one judge. The Circuit Courts have original common-law jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, and also original equity jurisdiction, until a separate Chancery Court is established by the Legislature. The judges are now elected by concurrent votes of the two houses of the General Assembly. An act was passed, however, in 1850-51, giving the election to the people, and limiting their term to six years; but this act has not been sanctioned by another Legislature before becoming law.

Respecting banking, the constitution provides that "no bank charter shall be for more than thirty years, nor shall it ever be extended or renewed. The capital of a bank shall not exceed $100,000, nor shall a dividend be made exceeding 16 per cent. a year. Stockholders shall be individually liable for the debts of the bank, and no notes shall be issued for less than $5." And, in relation to corporations, it further provides, that "no act of incorporation shall be passed or altered except by the assent of two-thirds of each house, and by giving three months' notice." "The credit of the State shall not be pledged in aid of any corporation whatsoever."

FLORIDA.

With regard to slavery, the same instrument says: "No law shall be passed to emancipate slaves, or to prohibit the immigration of persons bringing slaves with them; but free colored persons may be prevented from entering the State."

For an amendment of the constitution, two-thirds of each house must assent; the proposed alteration must then be published six months before the succeeding election, and then be again approved by a two-thirds vote in the succeeding General Assembly.

Florida, under the law-distributing congressional representation, has only one representative in Congress.

Finances, etc.—The assessed value of all real and personal property in the State in 1850, was $22,784,837; the value truly estimated, $2,862,270. Florida has no public debt. The balance in the treasury for the year ending 1st Nov., 1847, was $3,755 10; and the receipts for the year ending 1st Nov., 1848, amounted to $56,832 72—making the resources for that year $60,587 82. The aggregate expenditures during the year were $59,259 72, leaving in the treasury, for future disbursement, $1,328 10. The average ordinary expenses of the government, however, is only about $45,000 per annum.

Religious Denominations.—The statistics of the religious denominations of Florida, according to the census of 1850, are as follows:

Denomina- tions.	No. of Churches.	Church accom.	Value of Property.	Denomina- tions.	No. of Churches.	Church accom.	Value of Property.	Denomina- tions.	No. of Churches.	Church accom.	Value of Property.

Florida is a diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church; and it constitutes parts of the Roman Catholic dioceses of Savannah and Mobile—in the diocese of Savannah is included all of the State east of the Appalachicola, and in that of Mobile all west of that river.

Education.—Florida is as yet but ill provided with schools; it has no institutions in which a liberal education can be obtained, nor are the existing public schools or academies efficient in their organization. The State has ample means for the support of public schools from the proceeds of the lands designated by Congress for that purpose, and the State constitution makes it imperative on the Legislature to organize and provide for a system of public education. The peculiar circumstances of the people, and the sparsity of the population, however, will, for a long time to come, present obstacles to the operation of any system devised, and more than apologize for any deficiencies that may be observed in the educational condition of the inhabitants. These matters must be left to time and favoring circumstances.

Periodical Press.—There are 11 newspapers published in the State, of which 10 are issued weekly, and 1 semi-weekly; and of these 5 are whig in politics, 3 democratic, 1 neutral, and two, the politics of which are not stated in the census. The semi-weekly paper has an average circulation of 200 at each issue, or 20,500 copies annually; and the 10 weekly papers an aggregate circulation of 5,550, or 288,600 copies annually, making the 309,400 copies the total annual issue. The papers having the largest circulations are, the "Commercial Advertiser" of Appalachicola, which is 1,500 copies weekly; the "Sentinel," and "Floridian and Journal" of Tallahassee—the first having a weekly circulation of 1,300, and the latter of 800, and the "Florida Republican," which issues 700 weekly; none of the others circulate more than 400 copies of each issue.

Historical Sketch.—The adventures of Narvaez, and the romantic wanderings of Ponce de Leon and De Soto, the buccannering of the English, the wars waged with Oglethorpe by the Spaniards, and more recently, the long and bloody Indian wars, have given to Florida a greater historical interest than attaches to any other portion of the Union. But as one of the youngest sisters of our confederacy, but comparatively little is known of its geography, resources, and productions. Peninsulated from almost all intercourse with other States, it lies out of the great thoroughfare of travel; and while the commerce of the Great West sweeps around its shores, they are looked upon as so many dangerous reefs and rocks, threatening destruction to the mariner. In the foregoing sketch the aim has been to give an idea of the present actual state and condition of the country. Its history is briefly as follows:

Florida was discovered in 1496 by Cabot, and was visited by Ponce de Leon in 1512, who came in search of the spring of perpetual youth and beauty, and fabled mines of gold, the fame of which had filled all Europe. In 1562 we find the French and Spaniards contesting their respective rights to the soil. San Augustine was settled in 1564, it being by forty years the oldest settlement in the United States. Pensacola was settled in 1596.

The archives of the country during the Spanish rule having been carried away, it is difficult to judge to what extent the country was settled previous to its cession to Great Britain. Remains of ancient settlements exist between the Suwanee and Chattahoochee rivers; the traces of old fortifications, roads, etc., are very distinct, and gun-barrels, pottery, ship-spoons, etc., are found; but the public opinion of the country is rather inclined to attribute these to the buccaneers, and the quantity of ship-spoons, etc., found, seem to render the opinion highly probable. It is presumable, therefore, from the known inertness of the Spanish character, and the slight progress made by them in the settlement of new countries, that their settlements in Florida were of very little extent; and, with the exception of establishing a few missions, they never ventured far from the coast, and paid but little attention to the cultivation of the soil.

The cession to Great Britain was made in 1763: most of the Spaniards left the country, and it soon began to prosper under the energetic impulse communicated by the Anglo-Saxon race. Efforts at settlement on a large scale were immediately undertaken, the government favoring the enterprise by granting large tracts to settlers. Doctor Turnbull brought 1,500 families from the islands and shores of the Mediterranean, and located them at New Smyrna; and Lord Rolle, Governor Moultrie, Lord Beresford, and others established settlements; and on the breaking out of the Revolution, large numbers of royalists came into the country from Georgia and Carolina. In 1780 the exports of Florida reached 40,000 barrels of naval stores; and at this time one of the principal articles of culture was indigo, which in the markets of London brought a higher price than that from any other country. The British possession of the country continued for but twenty years, but during that period more was effected in settling and improving the country than in the two hundred years of Spanish occupation.

But, unfortunately for Florida, in 1783 the province was retro-ceded to Spain, and the English population, which in 1778, in East Florida alone, numbered over 13,000, principally left the country and went into the adjoining States. From this period to its cession to the United States in 1821—a period of nearly forty years—it languished and struggled along with difficulty; cultivation was neglected, the English settlements having been allowed to go to ruin; and at no time during this period was the population in both the Floridas estimated at over 10,000, a large portion of whom lived in towns, or were hangers-on of government. The Spanish population, to a considerable extent, left the country upon its cession, and immigration began to flow in rapidly; but the unsurveyed state of the country, the uncertainty of land-titles, etc., militated against its settlement; and the fierce and turbulent Indian race, who had made it a battle-ground for over two hundred and fifty years, and who had never been conquered, and had no egress from their peninsular home, occupied the best lands, rendering it impossible to obtain them. But yet in spite of all these obstacles, a considerable population planted themselves in the country.

The territory was now beginning to reap the fruits of its American occupation, when in 1835 the desolating Seminole war broke out and continued for seven years, rendering all habitation out of the limits of the occupied parts insecure, and destroying all the improvements which had been undertaken. In 1842 this war terminated, and the Indians, after a struggle of nearly three hundred years, were forced to yield, and were nearly all transferred beyond the Mississippi. Thus the population of Florida had, up to 1842, undergone four entire revolutions, and after having been settled by the European race for two hundred and eighty years, was forced to begin anew the settlement of the country. Since this period, however, it has progressed with reasonable rapidity, and in 1845 it was admitted into the Union as an independent State. The few Indians now remaining, although they have given some temporary trouble to the inhabitants, have lately made up their minds to abandon their homes, and will, before long, be domiciled with their brethren in the country beyond the limits of the white settlements, set apart for them by the beneficence of the Government, where alone they can be protected from utter annihilation.

FLUSHING, t. and p. o., Genesee co., Mich.: 87 m. E. N. E. Lansing. Drained chiefly by Coal cr. of Flint r. Surface level and elevated; soil of moderate fertility. Pop. 708.

FLUSHING, t. and p. v., Queens co., N. Y.: 124 m. S. by E. Albany. Drains into Long Island Sound, which bounds it on the N. Flushing Bay makes its W. and Little Neck Bay its E. border. Surface generally level—on the S. traversed by a stony ridge; soil a sandy loam, with some clay. It is a well-cultivated t., and produces a vast amount of market vegetables. The v. lies at the head of Flushing Bay, and contains a Roman Catholic, Episcopal, and 2 Methodist churches, and 2 Friends' meeting-houses, about 20 stores, 200 dwellings, and 2,500 inhabitants. It is much frequented in the summer months, and steamboats ply regularly to and from New York City. St. Paul's College, an Episcopal seminary, is situated on College Point, about 2 m. N. of the village. Two newspapers, the "Flushing Journal," and the "Plain Dealer," are issued weekly. Pop. of t. 5,376.

FLUSHING, t. and p. v., Belmont co., Ohio: 98 m. E. by N. Columbus. Drained by Still-water cr. of Tuscarawas r. The v. contains various mechanic shops and stores, and about 200 inhabitants, many of whom are Quakers. Pop. of t. 1,912.

FLUSHING bay, N. Y.: an arm of Long Island Sound. It is 3 mile long, and about 1 mile wide, and navigable to the village of Flushing for steamboats.

FLUVANNA county, Virg. Situate E. centrally, and contains 416 sq. m. Drained by affluents of Rivanna and James rivers, the first of which passes through the co. from N. W. to S. E., and the last marks its S. border. Surface generally broken, but between the rivers there is a level tract of barren land. Soils indifferent, except on the rivers, where they are rich alluvium, and very fertile. Gold is found in all parts of the co., and has been extensively gathered in the vicinity of Palmyra. Cotton and the cereals form the chief staples. Farms 454; manuf. 51; dwell. 878, and pop.—wh. 4,589, fr. col. 211, sl. 4,737—total 9,487. Capital: Palmyra.

FONDA, v. and cap. Montgomery co., N. Y.: on the N. side of Mohawk r., 37 m. W. N. W. Albany. The Utica and Schenectady R. R. passes through it. Its principal buildings are the court-house, jail, etc., and it has several extensive manufacturing establishments. A newspaper, the "F. Sentinel" (whig), is issued weekly. Pop. about 600.

FOND DU LAC county, Wisc. Situate E. middle, and contains 964 sq. m. Drained in the W. by numerous streams falling into Winnebago Lake, and in the E. by streams flowing to Lake Michigan. The Sheboygan and Milwaukee rivers are the largest of these; the soils excellent, and wood plentiful; about one half the surface prairie, and there are some swamps and ponds. Farms 921; manuf. 16; dwell. 2,721, and pop.—wh. 14,465, fr. col. 3—total 14,468. Capital: Fond du Lac. Public Works: Fond du Lac and Chicago R. R., and others projected; also several plank-roads.

FOND DU LAC, p. v., and cap. Fond du Lac co., Wisc.: on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the lake, 66 m. N. E. Madison. It is a place of active trade, and steamboats run regularly between this and other places on the lake and the Neenah r. Pop. about 2,000. A newspaper, the "Fond du Lac Journal" (dem.), is issued weekly.

FOND DU LAC, a lake, Wisc.: this lake is from 30 to 35 m. long, and about 8 m. wide, and has a depth sufficient for the purposes of navigation. The Neenah r. enters it near the middle on the W. shore, and leaves it at the N. W. angle by two channels, inclosing Doty's Island, by which it is connected with Little Butte des Morts Lake. These channels are known as the Winnebago Rapids. On the N. extremity the shore is low, having a narrow sandy beach for an extent of about 8 m. On the E. side the shore presents remarkable features for an extent of 15 m., in a wall composed of rocks laid together as if placed there by the hand of art. A similar wall pertains to portions of the W. shore, but with less continuity than is observed on the E. In many respects the scenery resembles that of Seneca Lake, in N. Y.

Allen co., Ind.: on a high bank, opposite to which, on the N., the St. Mary's and the St. Joseph unite and form the Maumee r., in lat. 41° 05' N., and long. 85° 09' W., 103 m. N. N. E. Indianapolis. Here was the "Twilight Village," or principal seat of the Miami, in their language called Ke-ki-o-que, and here too was old Fort Wayne, built by General Wayne, Sept., 1794, and just below, on the opposite side of the Maumee, was fought the disastrous battle of 22d Oct., 1790. At one time it was called "French Stores," as it was for a long time a trading post of that nation. Fort Wayne continued as a military post until 1819, and until the removal of the Miami and Pottowattomes in 1841, was resorted to by them for the disposal of their furs and to spend their annuities. It is now one of the most flourishing towns in the State, and contains about 6,000 inhabitants. In 1840 it did not contain more than 1,600 inhabitants. The Wabash and Erie Canal gives it access to the Wabash Valley and the Ohio r. on the one hand, and the Maumee Valley and Lake Erie on the other. Railroads, also, are being constructed to Lake Erie and central Ohio; also to Chicago, on Lake Michigan, and southward to the Ohio r. Several plank-roads also extend into the interior. The surrounding country is one of the best farming sections, and produces abundance of grain and provisions. With these advantages of travel and transport, it must become a centre of a vast commerce, and in time a populous city, through which the products of a wide territory must pass for a market. It already contains extensive warehouses, stores, etc., the county buildings, a United States land office, a branch of the State Bank, etc., and has many substantial brick dwellings. All the principal religious denominations have churches in the place, and there are several first-rate academies and schools, among which may be mentioned the Methodist Female College, and a Catholic institution under the Sisters of Providence. Two newspapers, the "F. W. Sentinel" (dem.), and the "F. W. Times" (dem.), are issued weekly.

FORT WINNEBAGO, p. v., and cap. Columbia co., Wis.: at the portage between the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, 83 m. N. Madison. It is one of the eligibly-situated trading towns in the State, and has now about 800 inhabitants. The fort is abandoned as a military post.

FORT WOLCOTT: a U. S. military post, Department No. 1, Eastern Division, Newport, R. I.: lat. $41^{\circ} 30' N.$, and long. $71^{\circ} 15' W.$

FORT WOOD: a U. S. military post, Department No. 3, Eastern Division, Bedlow's Island, Harbor of New York, N. Y.: lat. $40^{\circ} 42' N.$, and $74^{\circ} 02' W.$ long. This island fortification has for many years been the chief Recruiting Depot of the United States army, and at various times it has had over a thousand men under drill and subject to draft. Between 3,000 and 4,000 recruits are annually passed through this "gateway to glory."

W. by S. Washington, D. C. The river, here eighty yards wide, winds through a deep limestone valley, on a plateau of which the city is built, and opposite to and connected with it by a chain bridge, is South Frankfort, its suburb. Behind the city the land rises abruptly 150 to 200 feet to the general level of the country, from which elevation the valley scene is extensive, and full of picture. Heavy rains frequently cause the river to rise 50 or 60 feet above its ordinary level. The river, the navigation of which has been improved by locks and dams, is regularly navigated to Frankfort by steamboats of considerable burden, and an extensive commerce, supported by a fine country neighboring on the banks of the Kentucky, centres at this point. The city is also connected with the Ohio by a railroad to Louisville, and there is a railroad to Lexington, at which place other railroads diverge to the N. and N. E., and also to the S., whence they are continued to the Atlantic cities, and to those of the Mississippi and Gulf of Mexico. Frankfort is a well-built and compact place; the streets are regular and wide, and many of the houses and public buildings of brick and white marble. Of the latter material, which is found abundantly in all this region, the State House is built: it is a splendid edifice, 86 by 54 feet, with a Ionic portico in front, and a lighted cupola on the top. The State Penitentiary is also located here, and among its other buildings are the court-house, the county jail, a market, etc. Its public press consists of 1 daily, 4 weekly, 1 semi-monthly, and 1 monthly publications, viz., the "Commonwealth" (whig), daily and weekly; the "Old Guard;" the "Kentucky Yeoman" (dem.), and the "Champion of Reform"—all weekly; the "Ecclesiastical Reformer," semi-monthly; and the "Methodist Monthly Magazine," monthly. The manufactures of the city are various and extensive, and ships of considerable burden have been built here, and floated down the river to New Orleans. The city was founded in 1756, and was made the seat of government in 1792. In 1810 it had 1,099 inhabitants; in 1820, 1,679; in 1830, 1,680; in 1840, 1,917; and in 1850, 4,872.

FRANKFORT, t. and p. v., Waldo co., Me.: 51 m. E. N. E. Augusta. Drained by Marsh r. of the Penobscot, the latter forming the E. boundary, and affording a navigable channel throughout the year. FULWOOD'S STORE, p. o., Union co., N. Car.: 122 m. W. S. W. Raleigh.

FUNDY, bay: of this bay washes a part of the eastern shore of Maine, and is an important channel of commerce between the United States and British provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It sets up round Cape Sable in lat. 43° 24' N., and long. 65° 39' W., and crosses to the shore of Maine a little W. of Frenchman's Bay, from the mouth of which to the cape is about 150 miles. From Eastport to St. John's, N. B., is 60 m., from St. John's to Annapolis 40 m., and from thence to Halifax, overland, about 70 m. The bay is divided near its head by Chignecto Cape. The N. W. part is called Chignecto Bay, and the S. E. the Basin of Mines. From Eastport to the head of Chignecto Bay is 170 m., to Windsor, at the head of the Basin of Mines, 150 m., and from Windsor to Halifax 45 m. The commerce of this bay is very considerable, and its fisheries are the most extensive and valuable in the world. The tides are supposed to rise higher in the Bay of Fundy than in any other part of the world, and their elevation increases in ascending; at Eastport they rise 25 feet, at St. John's 30, at Cape Split 55, at Windsor 60, and at Cumberland 71. The islands within the bay are Grand Menan, and a cluster of small islands round it off. West Quoddy Head, and Campo Bello, near Eastport, and others—all belonging to the British. Isle de Haute contains beautiful specimens of asbestos. The rapidity of the tides, the almost persistent fogs, and the absence of good harbors between Eastport and St. John's, and from St. John's to Chignecto Cape, render the navigation dangerous and difficult. The tides herald their approach by a roaring turmoil, and overwhelm in their course all opposition, the first tide wave being from 8 to 10 feet in height. The harbor of St. John's is of easy access, safe, and of sufficient expanse and depth for a large fleet. It is located at the outlet of the great river of the same name, in lat. $45^{\circ} 20'$ N., and long. 66° W. Its chief export is lumber, and of this material it supplies by far the greatest quantity received in England.

N. by W. Springfield. It is the metropolis of the great lead region of northern Illinois and the commercial dépot of an extensive and fine country, the river being navigable to this point for the largest river steamers at all seasons. Its trade extends to all the towns on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. The two parts of the city (the most densely populated part being on the W. side of the river), are connected by bridges; it contains a court-house, jail, and other county buildings, several churches and schools, and has extensive manufactures, chiefly consisting of such as are incident to the peculiar business of the place. Large quantities of copper are also smelted here, and there are numerous flour and saw mills. In 1851 it exported 39,082,190 lbs. of lead, valued at $1,417,851, and among its other principal exports were flour, 39,335 barrels; barley, 42,731 bushels; pork, 3,185 barrels; lard, 125,000 pounds; bacon, 312,568 pounds; butter, 57,613 pounds; eggs, 22,880 dozen; hides and skins, 9,326; horses, 800; cattle, 1,500, etc., etc. It is also a great lumber market—in the same year it received 5,085,634 feet lumber, 2,470,500 shingles, and timber and wood of other descriptions. Galena has two daily papers, the "North-Western Gazette" (whig), and the "G. Jeffersonian" (dem.)—the first named has also tri-weekly and weekly issues, and the latter a weekly edition. The city was first settled in 1826, and was then an outpost of the wilderness, 300 m. from the settlements. In 1840 it had 1,843 inhabitants, and in 1850 its population numbered about 6,500, with a densely settled vicinity. The Galena Branch of the Illinois Central R. R. passes through the city, and the Galena and Chicago Union R. R., gives it access to the lake ports and roads leading eastward.

GALENA, p. v., Delaware co., Ohio: on Big Walnut cr., 18 m. N. N. E. Columbus.

GALES, p. v., Sullivan county, N. Y.: 83 m. S. S. W. Albany.

GALESBURGH, p. v., Knox co., Ill.: 86 m. N. N. W. Springfield. It is the seat of Knox College, founded in 1837, and which, in 1850, had 5 professors, 25 alumni, and 49 students; and a library of 2,470 volumes. The v. contains several stores and about 600 inhabitants, and here are published two newspapers, the "G. News Letter" and the "North-Western Gazetteer," both weekly issues. The Central Military Track R. R. will here form a junction with the Aurora Extension R. R.; and the Peoria and Oquaka R. R. will intersect the former a little S. of the v.—these, together, forming direct communication between Chicago and two points on the Mississippi river.

GALESBURGH, p. v., Kalamazoo co., Mich.: on the N. side of Kalamazoo r., 52 m. S. W. Lansing. It is a thriving v., and has numerous mills and stores. The Michigan Central R. R. intersects it 134 m. W. from Detroit.

GALE'S FERRY, p. o., New London co., Conn.

GALESVILLE, p. v., Washington co., N. Y.: about a mile S. of Battenkill and 31 m. N. N. E. Albany.

GALLON, p. v., Crawford co., Ohio: on the W. branch of Whetstone r., 64 m. N. N. E. Columbus. It is a thriving village and an important railroad station on the Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R., 79 m. from Cleveland and 176 m. from Cincinnati. Here also will be the E. terminus of the Bellefontaine and Indiana R. R.

GALLAGHERVILLE, p. v., Chester co., Penn.: on the line of the Philadelphia and Columbia R. R., 72 m. E. by S. from Harrisburg.

GALLATIA, p. v., Gallatin county, Ill.: 163 m. S. S. E. Springfield.

GALLATIN county, Ill. Situate S. E., and contains 324 sq. m. Drained by Saline cr. and its tributaries. The Wabash and Ohio rivers bound it on the E., and above the mouth of the first mentioned there is a large island formed by the bifurcation of the stream. Surface undulating and chiefly prairie, with some swamps in the eastern section; soil chiefly sandy, resting on slate; and there are several salt springs. Farms 570; manuf. 17; dwell. 1,000, and pop.—wh. 5,109, fr. col. 339—total 5,443. Capital: Equality. Public Works: Alton and Nashville R. R. (projected).

GALLATIN county, Ky. Situate N. middle, and contains 152 sq. m. The Ohio r. makes its N. boundary, and Big Bone Lick on the N. E., and Eagle r., a branch of Kentucky r., on the S. W., its boundaries in these directions. Surface undulating, and on the Ohio hilly; soils, fertile, producing good crops of the grains and tobacco. In every part of county fine timber is plentiful. Farms 414; manuf. 11; dwell. 747, and pop.—wh. 4,399, fr. col. 34, sl. 704—total 5,137. Capital: Warsaw.

GALLATIN, p. v., Parke co., Ind.: on the S. side of Big Pigeon cr., 56 m. W. S. W. Indianapolis. It has numerous mills, and both up and down the stream mills of all descriptions are in full operation.

GALLATIN, p. v., and cap. Copiah co., Miss.: on the right side of Bayou Pierre r., 24 m. S. S. W. Jackson. It has a court-house, etc., and about 400 inhabitants; and here is published the "G. Argus," a weekly newspaper. The country around is noted as a fine cotton growing region.

GALLATIN, p. v., and cap. Daviess co., Mo.: on the W. side of and 1 m. from the W. fork of Grand r. of the Missouri, 137 m. N. W. Jefferson City. It has a court-house, etc., and about 300 inhabitants.

GALLATIN, p. v., and cap. Sumner co., Tenn.: about 3 m. N. of Cumberland r., 23 m. N. E. Nashville. It contains a court-house, etc., several churches, academies, and seminaries, and about 1,200 inhabitants. A newspaper, the "Tenth Legion" (dem.), is issued weekly.

GALLATIN river, N. W. Ter.: one of the head streams of the Missouri r., rising from the E. slope of the Rocky Mountains, near the sources of Yellow r. Its course is N., and uniting with Madison and Jefferson rivers, it constitutes the Missouri.

GALLATINVILLE, p. v., Columbia co., N. Y.: 42 m. S. by E. Albany. The t. of Gallatin is drained by Jansen's cr., is somewhat hilly, and has a soil of ordinary fertility; its pop. in 1850 was 1,536.

GALLIA county, Ohio. Situate S., and contains 520 sq. m. Drained by Raccoon cr. and several smaller tributaries of the Ohio, which river washes its E. border. Surface generally hilly and broken, and the soil, excepting that of the Ohio bottoms, of inferior quality. The county was settled in 1790 by Frenchmen, and hence its name. Farms 1,190; manuf. 9; dwell. 2,975, and pop.—wh. 15,365, fr. col. 1,198—total 17,063. Capital: Gallipolis.

GALLIA FURNACE, p. o., Gallia co., Ohio: 79 m. S. S. E. Columbus.

GALLILEE, p. o., Wayne co., Penn.: 122 m. N. E. Harrisburg. Originally a Moravian settlement.

GALLIPOLIS, p. v., and cap. Gallia co., Ohio: on the right bank of Ohio r., 88 m. S. S. E. Columbus. The v. is pleasantly situate on a high bank, 10 or 12 feet above the greatest floods; it contains a court-house, jail, 4 churches, mills and factories, numerous mechanic shops and stores; and among its dwellings are many handsome brick buildings. It has considerable river trade, and is a forwarding point for a great deal of produce. Its pop. in 1850 was 1,686. Two newspapers are published here, the "G. Journal" (whig), and the "Gallia Courier" (neutral), both weekly issues. The v. dates from 1810: the t. was settled in 1791 by Frenchmen, many of whose descendants still reside here. Pop. of t. 2,226.

GALLOWAY, p. v., La Salle co., Ill.: on the S. W. side of Vermillion r. of the Illinois, 100 m. N. N. W. Springfield.

GALLUPVILLE, p. v., Schoharie co., N. Y.: on a branch of Schoharie cr., 22 m. W. Albany.

GALLY CREEK, p. o., Pope co., Ark.: 76 m. W. N. W. Little Rock.

GALUM, p. o., Perry co., Ill.: on a cr. so called, 114 m. S. Springfield.

GALVESTON county, Tex. Situate S. E., and contains 620 sq. m. This county consists of two portions—mainland and insular. The mainland portion lies on the W. side of Galveston Bay, and is drained by Clear, Dickinson's, Highland, and other creeks running into it. The island of Galveston is 36 m. long and about 2 m. wide, and lies opposite the main, from which it is separated by West Bay. No portion of the surface is more than 20 feet above the level of the Gulf of Mexico, and with the exception of several small groves of live oak, the whole is open prairie; soils a black mold, resting on a layer of sand and comminuted shells, indicating the county to have been at no distant period the bed of the waters of the gulf. Farms 33; manuf. 33; dwell 727, and pop.—wh. 3,735, fr. col. 30, sl. 714—total 4,529. Capital: Galveston. Public Works: Several railroads are projected which will make Galveston their seaward terminus.

GALVESTON, p. city, port of entry, and cap. Galveston co., Tex.: near the E. end of Galveston Island, 200 m. E. S. E. Austin City. Lat. 29° 16' 37" N., and 94° 49' 41" W. It is the commercial emporium of Texas, and has the best and least difficult harbor on the whole coast. The clearances for foreign ports in 1850 were 9 vessels (2,924 tons), and the entrances, 10 vessels (2,957 tons). The tonnage of the district was 3,309 tons, of which 416 tons were registered, and 874 tons sailed by steam-power. The great bulk of its commerce is coastwise with New Orleans and New York, and the former port is connected with it by regular steamship lines. Railroads are now being built into the N. and N. W. interior, which will open up the country to settlement and a market. The city contains the court-house, a jail, and other co. buildings, several handsome churches, and many of the dwellings are elegant structures. It has numerous wars houses, wholesale and retail stores, and hotels; and here are published four newspapers, the "G. News" (neutral), and the "Civilian and Gazette" (dem.), tri-weekly issues; the "G. Journal" (whig), a semi-weekly; and the "G. Zeitung" (dem.), a weekly German paper. Galveston Island, on which the city stands, is about 36 m. long, with an average width of 2 m. The soil is good, being a black mold, about a foot deep, resting on sand and shells, and it has several ponds of good water. The air is cool and refreshing, and hence it has become a summer resort for invalids. Immense beds of oysters are found near its W. shore, and large quantities of fish are caught on all sides; wild geese, teal, brant, and other birds flock here to winter. This island was formerly a resort for pirates: the celebrated Lafitte had a fort here, the ruins of which are still seen about 2 m. from its E. extremity on the W. shore. It is now in a state of excellent cultivation, and the residence of many wealthy farmers. The population of the city is now about 4,167.

GALWAY, t. and p. o., Saratoga co., N. Y.: 29 m. N. W. Albany. Drained by creeks flowing to the Mohawk and the Hudson. Surface undulating—in parts hilly; soil clayey loam, and well cultivated. The v. is a small central settlement. The t. has numerous manufacturing establishments, fulling mills, woolen factories, tanneries, and grist and saw mills; also several stores. Pop. 2,158.

GAMBER, p. v., Knox co., Ohio: on the N. side of Vernon r., 42 m. N. E. Columbus. It is situate on a high and level ridge, encompassed on three sides by the river. It was laid out in 1826 in the centre of a tract of 4,000 acres belonging to Kenyon College, and was named after Lord Gambier, a prominent patron of that institution. It is now a flourishing v., but still derives its importance from the College. The buildings of Kenyon College are four in number, the principal building being an elegant Gothic edifice, of hewn stone, 190 feet long and four stories high. It was founded in 1826, by funds obtained in England, and is under the direction of the Episcopalians. In 1850 it had a president and five professors, 60 alumni, and 50 students, and its library contained 7,000 volumes. The theological department was founded in 1823, and has four professors and a library of 4,500 volumes. Here are published the "Western Episcopalian," a monthly religious periodical; the "Physico-Medical Journal," a semi-monthly, and the "Universalist Advocate," also a semi-monthly. The population of the v. numbers between 400 and 500 souls.

GARDINER, t. and p. v., Kennebec co., Me.: on the W. side of Kennebec r., 12 m. S. by E. Augusta. The Cobbessee water here enters the Kennebec and produces a water-power of great usefulness and extent. The mills here in operation are numerous, and supply immense quantities of sawn lumber for export. The village lies on the Kennebec, the site rising gently from the river, on the edge of which is the business portion. The "Kennebec Transcript" is published semi-weekly. In the v. are numerous well-built dwellings, a lyceum, several churches, with stores, mechanic shops, etc. Large vessels come up to this point to load, and steamboats, plying on the river, call regularly. The Kennebec and Portland R. R. passes through, touching the v. 7 m. from Augusta, and 53 from Portland. Pop. in 1840, 5,042; in 1850, 6,456.

GARDINER'S bay, N. Y.: at the E. end of Long Island. It is a considerable body of water, of a somewhat circular shape, 8 m. in mean diameter, situate between the mainland and Gardiner's Island.

GARDINER'S island, Suffolk co., N. Y.: off the E. end of Long Island, from which it is distant some 3 or 4 m. It is about 6 m. long, and averages 2 m. wide, forming the E. boundary of Gardiner's Bay. Gardiner's Point is a long neck of land, projecting N. This island was settled in 1639 by Lyon Gardiner, a Scotchman; his descendants still own and occupy it.

GARDNER, t. and p. v., Worcester county, Mass.: 50 m. W. N. W. Boston. Drained by branches of Miller's river, which afford water-power. Surface uneven; soil of average quality. The v. is on the Vermont and Massachusetts R. R. There are considerable manufactures in the town. Population 1,422.

GASCONADE county, Mo.: Situate E. of centre, and contains 539 sq. m. Drained by Bourbeuse cr. of the Mississippi r. and Gasconade r., an affluent of the Missouri r., which forms its N. line. Surface much broken, and soil, especially on the rivers, very fertile. It abounds in mineral wealth, iron ore, saltpetre and sulphur being everywhere found, and limestone plenty. Corn is the agricultural staple. Farms 553; manuf. 16; dwell. 950, and pop.—wh. 4,884, fr. col. 0, sl. 112—total 4,996. Capital: Hermann. Public Works: Pacific R. R.

GASCONADE river, Mo.: rises in the S. parts of Texas and Wright counties by numerous head branches from the watershed dividing the streams flowing S. to White r., and those flowing N. to Missouri r. Its principal constituents are Piney, Robideaux, and Osage forks, all of which rise from the same highland. The length of the river is about 140 m., through all which it affords immense water-power and passes through a rich mineral country to the Missouri, which it enters about 100 m. from its mouth.

GENESE GROVE, p. o., Whitesides co., Ill.: 143 m. N. Springfield.

GENESESE river, N. Y.: an affluent of Lake Ontario. It rises in Potter co., Penn., and passing into the State of New York, pursues a northerly course to the lake. Its length is 145 m., of which 125 m. are in New York. At Rochester, within a distance of 3 m., it descends by several falls and rapids 226 feet, affording an immense water-power. It is navigable 4 m. to Carthage, and above the falls is boatable for 20 m. or more. The Genesee Valley Canal follows the course of this river, and is fed by it for a great distance. A railroad is also being constructed to follow in the same general direction, and the valley is crossed at four points by railroads traversing in an east and west direction. In the t. of Portage, Allegheny co., are three falls, one of 60, one of 90, and one of 110 feet, within a space of two miles, and along the river, for three miles, are perpendicular walls of stone, 400 feet high, to which depth it has worn a channel in the solid rock. At this point it is crossed by one of the most splendid viaducts in the Union, over which is carried the Buffalo and New York City R. R. The Valley of the Genesee is the finest wheat country in the States, and is now thickly settled and in a high state of cultivation.

GENESSEO, p. v., and cap. Henry co., Ill.: on a cr. of Green r., 116 m. N. W. Springfield. It has a court-house, etc., and about 200 inhabitants. The Chicago and Rock Island R. R. will pass through this village.

GENESSEO, L. p. v., and cap. Livingston co., N. Y.: 202 m. W. Albany. Situate between Genesee r. and Conesus Lake, and drained by creeks flowing into them. Surface terraced and furrowed by valleys; soil rich and fertile. The village, on an elevated table, about 1 m. E. of Genesee r., is well built, and has considerable trade. It contains a court-house, jail, etc., an academy (formerly Livingston County High School), numerous mechanic shops and stores, and about 1,700 inhabitants. The academy is a large three-story brick building. In this t. are situate the Wadsworth Farms, located on the broad alluvial flats of the Genesee, and noted for their fertility and superior cultivation. Two newspapers, the "Livingston Republican" (whig), and the "Livingston Union" (whig), are issued weekly. Pop. of t. 2,953.

GENEVA, p. v., Coffee county, Ala.: on Pear r., near its confluence with the Choctawhatchie river, 96 m. S. S. E. Montgomery.

GENEVA, p. v., Ontario co., N. Y.: on the N. W. corner of Seneca Lake, 159 m. W. by N. Albany. It is one of the most beautiful villages of the State. The principal street runs parallel with the lake shore at an elevation of 100 feet, and from many of its residences terraced gardens extend to the banks of the lake. It has some manufacturers, but is chiefly known as the seat of Geneva College and its Medical School. The College was founded in 1823, and had in 1850 5 professors, 131 alumni, and 42 students, with a library of 5,400 volumes. The Medical Institute, a department of the College, was founded in 1835, and had 6 professors, 98 graduates, and 60 students. Besides the College libraries, there are two others in the village with cabinets of minerals, and ample supplies of philosophical apparatus. Three newspapers are published, viz., the "G. Courier" (whig), the "G. Gazette" (dem.), and the "Western Atlas" (dem.), all weekly issues. Pop. about 4,500.

GENEVA, t. and p. v., Ashtabula co., Ohio: 162 m. N. E. Columbus. Drained by creeks of Lake Erie, which makes its N. boundary. Surface level; soil rich and deep. The v. lies on the line of the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula R. R., 54 m. from Cleveland. Pop. of t. 1,358.

GENEVA, t. and p. o., Walworth co., Wisc.: 53 m. S. E. Madison. Drained by creeks of Fox r. and by Duck Lake. The v. is located at the outlet of Geneva Lake, and has several mills, etc. Pop. of t. 1,538.

GENEVA, p. v., Kane co., Ill.: on the W. side of Fox r. of the Illinois, 137 m. N. E. by N. Springfield. It is a new and rapidly-improving v., and a point of commercial importance, being the terminus of a branch of the Galena and Chicago Union R. R., 40 m. from Chicago. A newspaper, the "Western Mercury," is issued weekly. Pop. 911.

GENEVA BAY, p. o., Walworth co., Wisc.: on a bay on the N. W. side of Geneva Lake, 56 m. S. E. Madison.

GENOA, p. o., De Kalb co., Ill.: on Sycamore r., 164 m. N. N. E. Springfield.

GENOA, t. and p. o., Livingston co., Mich.: 40 m. E. S. E.

GENOA, p. v., Christian county, Ky.: 172 m. W. S. W. Frankfort.

GENOA, p. v., Walworth co., Wisc.: 53 m. S. E. Madison.

GENOA, t. and p. v., Cayuga co., N. Y.: 143 m. W. Albany. Drained by Big Salmon cr. and its branches, and bounded W. by Cayuga Lake. The v. has several manufactures, etc., and about 250 inhabitants. Pop. of t. 2,533.

GENOA CROSS ROADS, p. o., Delaware co., Ohio: 17 m. N. by E. Columbus.

GENTRY COUNTY, Mo. Situate N. W., and contains 797 sq. m. Drained by Little Platte r., West Fork of Grand r., and their branches. Surface diversified; soil of average fertility, well covered with timber, and well watered. Farms 444; manuf. 0; dwell. 708, and pop.—wh. 4,195, fr. col. 3, sl. 50—total 4,245. Capital: Athens.

GEORGE LAKE, N. Y.: called, also, Lake Horicon. It lies chiefly between Warren and Washington counties, and is elevated 243 feet above the level of Hudson river. Length 36 m.; breadth, from 2 to 3 m., and surrounded by lofty and picturesque hills. Its surface embosoms as many islets as there are days in the year—some of considerable size, and cultivated. Diamond Island is celebrated for its beautiful quartz crystals. A number of ruined forts are found on the shores of the lake, which to the tourist recall recollections of troublous times. The bed of the lake is yellow sand, and the water is so pure and transparent that the bottom may be seen at the depth of thirty or forty feet, and myriads of fish sporting in the limpid element. The French call it Lac Sacrament, on account of the purity of its waters. Salmon-trout, pike, pickerel, perch, silver and brook trout, etc., are taken in abundance. The lake has its outlet into Lake Champlain at Ticonderoga. A tourist, whose admiration of the scenery in the vicinity of Lake George is apparent, makes the following note of his impressions: "Time would fail us to enumerate the points of attraction on the way. The remains of Fort George and Fort William Henry at the head of the lake, must not be passed without a visit; neither must you leave the Lake House, till in the quiet hour of twilight, the old rusty gun has been fired, and you have heard the echo which is sent back from one mountain-top to another, till the sound seems to have died away, and then have it revive and reverberate again, as though another explosion had suddenly taken place. Every foot of the ground along the shore, and even the water itself, possesses vast interest. The bed of the lake is a handsome, yellowish sand, and the water is so pure and transparent as to render the bottom visible from thirty to forty feet. Here the delicious salmon-trout, that weigh from twelve to twenty pounds, are seen in their folksome mood, sporting with each other, and inviting the bait of the angler." The Lake House is a noted traveler's rest in the village of Caldwell, a pleasant place situate at the base of the lake. Tourists reach this from Albany via railroad to Fort Edward, and thence by an excellent road through Glens Falls Village, etc. During the summer season a steamboat carries travelers from Caldwell to the head of the lake, where stages are in readiness to proceed on to the steamboat landing at Ticonderoga, on Lake Champlain.

GEORGETOWN district, S. Car. Situate E., and contains 688 sq. m. Drained by Santee r., its S. boundary, Black, Great Pedee, and Waccamaw rivers—the last two emptying into Winyaw Bay, which lies wholly within it. Surface low and level. Though marshy in parts, it is very fertile. Rice is the great staple. Corn, potatoes, and cotton are grown largely. Farms 550; manuf. 6; dwell. 575, and pop.—wh. 2,193, fr. col. 201, sl. 18,253—total 20,647. Capital: Georgetown.

GEORGETOWN, p. v., and cap. Sussex co., Del.: at the sources of Nanticoke and Indian rivers, 34 m. S. by E. Dover. It contains a court-house, jail, etc., and about 400 inhabitants. Pop. 2,318.

GEORGETOWN, p. city and port of entry, Washington co., D. C.: a suburb of Washington, it is divided from that city by Rock cr. It is beautifully located on a range of hills rising above the Potomac, and stretching in undulating beauty along its borders. The heights of Georgetown are lofty eminences, overlooking the city from the N. and W. Along these are many splendid villas and extensive gardens in the highest state of cultivation. Below reposes the city, and as far as the eye can reach, the silvery Potomac courses through a scene of exquisite beauty. The city presents many objects of attraction: its ancient college, a catholic institution; its nunnery; its various literary institutions; its splendid aqueduct, and other noted edifices, are worthy of attention. The college is situate on the N. bank of the Potomac—it was originally an academy, founded in 1759 by the first Catholic bishop of the United States, and in 1799 it was chartered as a college. In 1815 Congress raised it to the dignity of a university, and in 1851 a medical department was opened at Washington. The college buildings are spacious, and contain a fine library of 25,000 volumes, an extensive philosophical apparatus, and a museum of natural history. The curriculum of studies occupies seven years. The nunnery, or Convent of the Visitation, is situate on the heights, contiguous to the E. margin of the river. The building appropriated for the ladies' academy is of brick, between 200 and 300 feet long, and 40 feet in breadth. These buildings occupy part of the side of an oblong square of five acres, a portion of which is laid out as a botanic garden. There are other edifices on the square, as the bishop's residence, an elegant chapel, the convent, and charity schools. The whole is under the direction of the Sisters of the Visitation. The aqueduct which conveys the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal over the Potomac, is a stupendous work; the piers, nine in number, and 36 feet above high water, are of granite, and embedded 17 feet in the bottom of the river upon solid rock—its length is 1,446 feet, and the cost of construction was $2,600,000. This aqueduct carries the canal to Alexandria. Oak Hill Cemetery, on the heights, is also worthy of note; it was laid out in 1849 at the expense of W. W. Corcoran, Esq., the eminent banker, and is surrounded by a massive iron railing, with a gate-keeper's lodge in the Norman style, and an elegant Gothic chapel. Georgetown was formerly a port of some note, and had considerable trade, and is even now a thriving and busy place. It is connected by canal and railroad with all parts of the Union. Of late years many improvements have been made in its streets, and many new buildings have been erected. The city is also engaged in manufactures; in 1850 it had 59 establishments in operation, among which was a rolling mill, a cotton factory, and numerous flouring mills. Two newspapers are published here, the "G. Advocate," tri-weekly, and the "Potomac Advocate," weekly. Its foreign commerce in 1849-50 employed 3,134 tons of shipping, viz.: clearances, 10 vessels (1,720 tons), and entrances, 9 vessels (1,414 tons). The shipping owned in the district amounted to 17,010 tons, of which 2,796 was registered tonnage, 12,763 enrolled and licensed tonnage, and 1,451 licensed. The steam shipping amounted to 1,949 tons; and 8 vessels (288 tons) were built during the year. The general statistics of the city are as follows: dwellings 1,174, families 1,215, and population 8,366, of which 6,051 were white persons, 1,560 free persons of color, and 725 slaves. The population in 1810 was 4,988; in 1820, 7,360; in 1830, 8,441; in 1840, 7,312; and in 1850, 8,366.

GEORGETOWN, p. v., Randolph co., Ga.: on the E. bank of Chattahoochee r., opposite the mouth of Eufaula cr., 139 m. S. W. Montgomery. It is a flourishing v., and has considerable river trade. Pop. 600.

GEORGETOWN, p. v., and cap. Scott co., Ky.: on the N. branch of Elkhorn cr. of Kentucky r., 18 m. E. by N. Frankfort. It contains the court-house, etc., and is the seat of Georgetown College, founded in 1830, and under the direction of the Baptists. In 1850 it had 7 professors, 80 alumni, and 66 students; and a library of 650 volumes. The "Delphian Oracle" is a monthly literary magazine, published by the students, and in the v. is also published the "G. Herald," a weekly newspaper. Pop. about 1,500.

It contains a court-house, jail, 6 churches, a large number of stores and mechanic shops, and about 2,904 inhabitants. Two newspapers are published here, the "Winyaw Observer" (dem.), semi-weekly, and the "True Republican" (dem.), weekly. Its harbor is deep enough for vessels drawing 11 feet water; and the rivers flowing into Winyaw Bay, open to the port an extensive and fertile back country. It has an extensive coasting trade, and regular steamers ply to and from Charleston and on the Great Pee Dee r. The entrances in 1850 from foreign countries were 2 vessels (257 tons), and the clearances to foreign countries 24 vessels (8,685 tons). Tonnage of the district 2,779 tons, of which 1,749 was registered and 1,030 enrolled and licensed.

THE STATE OF GEORGIA.

GEORGIA is bounded on the north by Tennessee and North Carolina; on the north-east by South Carolina, from which Savannah River divides it; on the east by the Atlantic Ocean; on the south by Florida, and on the west by Alabama—the Chattahoochee River being the western boundary for more than half its length. It extends generally between latitudes 30° 22' and 35° N., and longitudes 80° 45' and 84° 41' W. from Greenwich, or 3° 49' and 7° 39' W. from Washington. Its greatest length from north to south is 322 miles, and its greatest width from the east point of Tybee Island, at the mouth of Savannah River, to Florence, on Chattahoochee River, 224 miles; but from this point it gradually narrows northward, and on the parallel of 84° 49' does not measure more than 126 miles. The whole area of the State is 58,000 square miles.

No State in the Union presents a richer field for the geologist than Georgia. With a territory embracing the southern extremity of the great Atlantic chains of mountains, extending across them to the north-west into the valley of the Mississippi, running to the south-west into the cretaceous slope of the Gulf of Mexico, and occupying along their eastern base a wide belt of territory, it contains most of the important geological formations. Commencing at the Atlantic Ocean and spreading out from 100 to 150 miles to the west, an extensive plain of a tertiary formation rises from the level of the sea, and gradually swells up to the height of about 500 feet, at a line passing near the head of navigation of the rivers Savannah, Ogeechee, Oconee, and Ocmulgee, where it meets a primary formation. Between the Ocmulgee and Flint rivers it leaves the primary formation to the right, and rests on the cretaceous from a point nearly midway between Macon and Knoxville, by a line running in a south-west direction to another point between Pataula Creek and Fort Gaines, on the Chattahoochee River. Bounded by the last mentioned line to the south-east, and by the southern edge of the primary, as indicated by the heads of navigation in the Flint and Chattahoochee rivers, the cretaceous formation extends from Alabama into Georgia, forming an acute triangle. The primary, or non-fossiliferous, bounded on the east by the tertiary and cretaceous formations as described above, crosses the State from north-east to south-west, with a width of 160 miles at the northern limit and of 100 miles at the southern. The Blue Ridge range of mountains passes near its western edge and forms the most elevated land of the State, varying in height from 1,200 to 4,000 feet. From this crest there is a gradual descent to the east by a series of parallel and undulating ridges, until the tertiary plain is reached. On the west the descent is much more precipitous. The western boundary of the primary is not very accurately established, but is believed to be not far from a line running nearly north and south through the centre of Gilmer County, and continued in the same direction to near Canton, in Cass County, and thence to the western base of the Allatoona Mountain, on the Etowah River, where it turns to the south-west, and passing near Van Wert, in Paulding County, and along the northern base of the Dugdown Mountain to the Alabama line. The north-western part of the State, bounded to the east and south by the western limit of the primary, consists of a transition, or older fossiliferous formation, except the extreme north-west corner, where the carboniferous occurs.

The coast is lined by a succession of low islands, intersected by numerous navigable channels, which afford good inland navigation all along the shore. They are generally separated from each other by wide bays or sounds, which bear their names and receive the waters of this section. The principal islands are Cabbage Island, Ossaba Island, St. Catharine's Island, Sapello Island, St. Simon's Island, Jekyll Island, Cumberland Island, etc. These are covered with rich plantations, and produce, as before stated, the long staple cotton called, from the place of its growth, sea-island cotton.

Along the southern line of the State, between the head branches of the Suwannee and the St. Mary's rivers, there is an extensive swamp, or series of swamps, covered with a thick growth of bay-trees, vines, and underwood, and in the wet season presenting the appearance of a wide lake containing islands of rich highland. This swamp extends over the border into Florida, and bears the Indian name of "Okefinoke." Several streams are lost in its morasses, and others, head waters of rivers flowing to the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico, take their rise from within its limits.

The great mineral region of Georgia is found in the primary and metamorphic formations of the spurs of the Alleghany Mountains. Through the northern portion of the State these pursue their course toward the south-west with similar features of parallelism and straightness peculiar to them further north; but their more broken character, the greater ruggedness of their outline, and the impetuous nature of their streams, testify to different geological formations than the stratified shales and sandstones of which they are composed in Pennsylvania. It is in these out-liers of the main ridge that the metamorphic slates and quartz rock are found, which are productive in gold ores; and frequently in near proximity to these are deposits of hematite iron ores of extraordinary extent. In the gneiss, also, are found veins of magnetic iron ore of great purity, as at Cane Creek, near Dahlonega. Specular ores, too, like those of the Iron Mountain in Missouri, are found in the vicinity of some of the hematite beds; and localities of the same ore are of frequent occurrence down the course of Chattahoochee River. Another range of them, of much greater consequence, is found in the Allatoona hills, along the Etowah River. Here the broad, shallow stream, obstructed in its course, falls over ledges of rock, producing good water power. On each side are seen, projecting from the hills, ledges of rough silicious rock, in strata of various degrees of thickness, dipping to the south of east. Beds of limestone are associated with these rocks and veins of sulphate of barytes, of great extent. On the south-eastern slope of this range of hills, talcose and mica slates, hornblende slate, green stone, and quartz veins containing gold, more abound. Through deep cuttings in these rocks, in one place 90 feet deep, the Western and Atlantic Railroad passes. To the west and north-west an extensive limestone country commences, about four miles from the river. Nearly the whole of Cass County is formed of this rock, and it spreads out into Floyd and Murray counties. Iron ores are found on both sides of the Etowah River. To the south-west they extend into Paulding County, and in the other direction through Cherokee County to its north-west corner; and so far as explored their range is about 40 miles, and their course about north-east and south-west. These ores, in their appearance and quality, resemble the best ores found in the Housatonic Valley. Numerous furnaces have been established in this region and are now in successful operation; the vast water-power, the abundance of timber, the cheapness of living, and the beauty of the climate being highly favorable characteristics of the region.

Georgia embraces every variety of soil, climate, and productions. While southern and middle Georgia are parched with heat, the more northerly climate among the mountains is moderate and even cold. The sky is of a deep blue, nor does a more lovely heaven smile upon Italy than that which favors this country. The cordon of islets which border the sea-coast has a light, sandy soil, but produces the finest staple, known to the world as sea-island cotton. In the south are the tide and swamp lands, producing immense crops of rice. The soil of this region varies as it is situated on the sea-shore or upon the large and small rivers. On the Savannah these lands are cultivated 20 miles from the brackish marsh up the river, and are the finest in the State; and next to these are the lands on the Altamaha River, which in width are equal to those on the Savannah. They do not extend from the marshes up more than 16 miles—beyond, the freshets render them valueless, except for timber. Next come the tide lands of the Ogeechee, extending 10 miles up from the marshes, which produce rice, but are not well adapted to cotton. The tide lands of the Great Santilla are not as broad as the others, but are productive and fertile 20 miles up from the marshes, yielding good crops of rice and cotton, and are not so liable to inundation as those of other large streams. The inland swamps produce abundantly. Black-seed cotton is produced on the oak lands adjoining the inland swamps, though these lands are said to be of inferior quality. About 60 or 70 miles from the coast begin the pine lands, which are valuable chiefly for the immense quantity of timber annually yielded. Tar, pitch, and turpentine are also largely manufactured in this section. The middle region of the State contains land of a red, loamy soil, producing tobacco, cotton, and all the grains. It was once very productive, but owing to the exhausting system of cultivation adopted by the planters, it has become in many parts much impoverished, and large gullies and red barren hill sides often meet the eye in places where once abundant crops were produced. The planters, however, have become awake to the folly of a system so injurious to their best interests, and hill-side ditching, manuring, and a judicious rotation of crops, together with occasional rest to the land, is gradually restoring the soil. The institution of agricultural societies has also of late years stimulated emulation in this direction, and many of the great planters have set a good example to their neighbors by adopting the improvements which science has proved necessary to insure success in agricultural operations. The lands in the south-western part of the State, between the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers, are in general fertile when first cleared, but are not very durable. Being of a light, sandy soil they produce fine crops of cotton and sometimes sugar cane for a few years, and then become exhausted, when resort must be had to fertilizers. These lands, however, are cheaper in proportion to their fertility than any others in Georgia. In the north part of the State—that part known as Cherokee Georgia—the valleys are exceedingly rich, producing wheat, corn, potatoes, etc., and in some places cotton is extensively raised; but the crop is not so certain as in the lower regions. This, indeed, is peculiarly a grain country, while the mountains yield the more valuable minerals, and are exceedingly attractive as grazing lands. The land here is more costly than in any other part of the State, ranging from $10 to $30 per acre; while in the south-west lands of equal fertility cost not more than one-third those sums—the difference being due to the greater durability of the northern soils. But Cherokee Georgia is not the place to raise cotton; it is to be the granary and work-shop of the State, and its fields will produce corn to feed the operatives who are to direct its water-power in manufacturing the cotton which the south produces, and in digging out from the bowels of the earth the minerals which are to regulate its inland commerce.

Upward of fifty streams in the State of Georgia are enumerated as deserving and having the designation of rivers. A very cursory glance at the map will show that her water resources are immense. The streams of this state alone which pour the volume of their waters from the mountain springs into the bosom of the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico, would supply sufficient power, in the eligible sites, to manufacture all the cotton grown in the world, or to grind all the grain grown within the limits of the Union. The navigable rivers are the Savannah, the Altamaha, the Oconee, the Ocmulgee, the St. Mary's, the Ogeechee, the Flint, the Chattahoochee, the Coosa, and various others. These bear down to the seaboard the productions of the interior, and are thronged by steamboats, sloops, and flat boats, laden with the material of a commerce valued at thirty-five to forty million of dollars a year. If Georgia has not the best of harbors, she has a large number, equal to all the requirements of the coasting trade. Savannah, Darien, Brunswick, and St. Mary's have harbor accommodations for a large class of shipping, and are the centres of a considerable foreign trade. The great river of the State is the Savannah, which rises by two principal branches in North Carolina, near the sources of the Tennessee and Hiwassee on the one side, and the Chattahoochee on the other, and after a course of about 300 miles, falls over the last chain of rock-hills into the great plain at Augusta, to which place, 250 miles from its mouth, it is navigable for steamers of light draft, and for large ships to Savannah, there being 18 or 19 feet water on the bar at low tide. Its principal tributaries are Brier Creek and Broad River. The Chattahoochee, rising near the southern branch of the Savannah, pursues at first a south-westerly course, but afterward turns to the south, and receiving Flint River on the Florida line, enters that State under the name of Appalachicola. It is navigable to the falls at Columbus, 300 miles from its mouth, for a great part of the year, and its whole length is about 500 miles. Flint River, above named, rises in the hilly country south of the Chattahoochee, and has a total length of 300 miles, of which 75 miles to the falls is open to navigation. The Oostanaula and Etowah, rising in the mountains of the north, unite their streams at Rome, in Floyd County, whence they pass directly west into Alabama, under the name of Coosa. The Altamaha is formed by the junction of the Oconee and the Ocmulgee, which rise in the hilly region south of the Chattahoochee, and flow for about 250 miles nearly parallel to each other, where the latter bends round to the east, and unites its waters with those of the former—there are 12 to 13 feet water on the bar of the Altamaha at ebb-tide, and steamboats ascend the Ocmulgee to Macon, and the Oconee to Milledgeville, although there are some obstructions to their navigation. The Ogeechee has a course of about 200 miles, of which 40 miles are navigated by small vessels. The Santilla, or St. Illa, has a winding course, chiefly through a low, swamp region, but is partially navigable for river craft. The St. Mary's River rises in a low ridge, near Okelnoke Swamp, and reaches the sea in Cumberland Sound; it has 13 feet of water on the bar at low tide, and sometimes as much as 28 feet in times of flood. The Allapaha and Withlacochee, principal constituents of Suwannee River of Florida, and the Ocklockonee River, are considerable streams in the south part of the State, which empty into the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Stephens, one of Georgia's representatives in Congress, in a speech before that body, exhibited the physical, industrial, and moral condition of his State in the following glowing terms: "Georgia is the youngest of the old thirteen States that formed the Union. At that time she was the weakest of that fraternal band." * * * * * "Boston, New York, and Richmond were nearly as old as Georgia now is, when Oglethorpe first landed at Savannah. But notwithstanding all this, I will not shrink from the comparison, let it be instituted when or where it may. Georgia has her beds of coal and iron; her lime, gypsum, and marl; her quarries of granite and marble. She has inexhaustible treasures of minerals, including gold, the most precious of metals. She has a soil and climate suitable for the growth and culture of every product known to husbandry and agriculture. A better country for wheat and corn, and all the cereal plants, to say nothing of cotton and tobacco, is not to be found in an equal space on this continent. There, too, grow the orange, the olive, the vine, and the fig, with forests of oak and pine sufficient to build and mast the navies of the world. She has mountains for grazing, rivers for commerce, and waterfalls for machinery of all kinds without number. Nor have these great natural advantages and resources been neglected. Young as she is, she is now the first cotton-growing State in the Union. She has, I believe, thirty-six cotton factories in operation, and a great many more hastening to completion—one of them has, or soon will have, ten thousand spindles, with two hundred looms, capable of turning out eight thousand yards of cloth per day. Her yarns are already finding their way to the markets of the North and foreign countries; and the day is not distant when she will take the lead in the manufacture as well as the production of this great staple. She has also her flour mills and paper mills—her forges, foundries, and furnaces, in full operation. Her exports exceed yearly $35,000,000—equal to if not greater than those of all New England together. She has six hundred and fifty miles of railroad in operation, at a cost of $15,000,000, and two hundred miles more in the course of construction. By her energy and enterprise she has scaled the mountain barriers, and opened the way for the steam-car from the southern Atlantic ports to the waters of the great valley of the West. But this is not all: she has four chartered universities—nay, five, for she has one devoted exclusively to the education of her daughters. She was the first State, I believe, to establish a female college, which is now in a flourishing condition, and one of the brightest ornaments of her character. She has four hundred young men pursuing a collegiate course—a greater number, I believe, than any State in the Union, in proportion to her white population. Go, then, and take your statistics if you wish—you will find not only all those things to be so; but I tell you also what you will not find, you will not find any body in that State begging bread or asking alms—you will find but few paupers—you will not find forty thousand beings, pinched with cold and hunger, demanding the right to labor, as I saw it stated to be the case not long since in the City of New York. And when you have got all the information you want, come and institute the comparison if you wish, with any State you please; make your own selection; I shall not shrink from it, nor will the people of that State shrink from it. Other gentlemen from the South can speak for their own States—I speak only for mine. And in her name, and in her behalf, as one of her representatives upon this floor, I accept the gauntlet in advance, and I have no fears of the result of a comparison of her statistics, socially, morally, politically, with any other state of equal population in this confederacy.”

 “That country has the greatest elements of prosperity where the same amount of human labor or exertion will procure the greatest amount of human comforts, and that people are the most prosperous, whether few or many, who, possessing those elements, control them by their energy, and industry, and economy for the accumulation of wealth. In these particulars the people of Georgia are inferior to none in this or any other country. They have abundant reason to be content with their lot.”  “The six hundred and fifty miles of railroad now in operation, to which I have alluded, were built by Georgia capital. One hundred and thirty-six miles, from Atlanta to Chattanooga, on the Tennessee River, which is one of the greatest monuments of the enterprise of the age, was built by the State. But her public debt is only a little over $1,500,000, while that of the State of New York is over $20,000,000, besides $14,000,000 owed by the city alone; and the debt of Pennsylvania is $40,000,000. The bonds of the State of Georgia are held mostly by her own people. You do not see them hawked about in Northern or foreign markets at a depreciation. But they, as well as the stocks and securities of the private companies, are held mostly by her own citizens, and are commanding premiums at home.”

Georgia is divided into 94 counties, the general statistics of which, and the capital of each in 1850, was as follows:

The whole number of dwellings in the State, at the above date, was 91,011, of families 91,471, and of inhabitants 905,999, viz., whites 521,438—males 266,096, and females 255,342; free colored 2,880—males 1,363, and females, 1,512; and slaves 331,651. Of the whole population, there were: deaf and dumb—wh. 211, fr. col. 0, sl. 41; blind—wh. 224, fr. col. 5, sl. 80; insane—wh. 251, fr. col. 2, sl. 23; and idiotic—wh. 476, fr. col. 3, sl. 93. The number of free persons born in the United States was 517,995; the number of foreign birth was 5,907, and of birth unknown, 507; the native population originated as follows: Maine 178, New Hampshire 122, Vermont 186, Massachusetts 594, Rhode Island 138, Connecticut 712, New York 1,203, New Jersey 331, Pennsylvania 642, Delaware 117, Maryland 703, District of Columbia 72, Virginia 7,331, North Carolina 37,522, South Carolina 52,154, Georgia 402,582, Florida 1,103, Alabama 31,154, Mississippi 154, Louisiana 42, Texas 23, Arkansas 25, Tennessee 8,211, Kentucky 458, Ohio 46, Michigan 3, Indiana 50, Illinois 41, Missouri 60, Iowa 1, Wisconsin 2, California 0, and the Territories 0; and the foreign population was composed of persons from—England 679, Ireland 3,202, Scotland 367, Wales 13, Germany 947, France 177, Spain 13, Portugal 5, Belgium 41, Holland 11, Turkey 1, Italy 33, Austria 3, Switzerland 38, Russia 3, Denmark 24, Norway 6, Sweden 11, Prussia 25, Greece 1, Asia 2, Africa 13, British America 108, Mexico 3, South America 8, West Indies 95, and other countries 58.

The following table will exhibit the decennial progress of the population since the first census of the State, taken by the United States authorities:

Census Year.	White Persons.	Colored Persons.			Total Population.	Decennial Increase.

The statistics of the industry and wealth of Georgia, as furnished by the census of 1850, and other official returns referring to that year, are as follows:

Occupied Lands, etc.—Improved lands, 6,373,479 acres; and unimproved lands, 16,442,900 acres—valued in cash at $95,753,445. Number of farms under cultivation, 51,759. Value of farming implements and machinery, $5,894,150.

Live-Stock.—Horses, 151,331; asses and mules, 57,859; milch cows, 334,223; working oxen, 73,256; other cattle, 690,016; sheep, 560,435; and swine, 2,168,617—valued in the aggregate at $25,728,416. (In 1840 there were 157,540 horses, mules, etc.; 584,414 neat cattle of all kinds; 267,107 sheep, and 1,457,755 swine.)

Grain Crops.—Wheat, 1,083,534 bushels; rye, 53,750 bushels; Indian corn, 30,050,090 bushels; oats, 3,820,044 bushels; barley, 11,501 bushels; and buckwheat, 250 bushels. (The crops of 1839-40 were—wheat, 1,501,530 bushels; barley, 12,979 bushels; oats, 1,610,030 bushels; rye, 60,693 bushels; buckwheat, 141 bushels; and Indian corn, 20,905,122 bushels.)

Other Crops.—Rice, 38,950,631 pounds; tobacco, 423,934 pounds; ginned cotton, 300,901 bales of 400 pounds; peas and beans, 1,142,011 bushels; potatoes—Irish, 227,379, and sweet, 6,986,423 bushels; hay, 23,449 tons; clover-seed, 132, and other grass-seed, 423 bushels; hops, 261 pounds; hemp—dew-rotted, 0, and water-rotted, 0 tons; flax, 5,357 pounds; flax-seed, 622 bushels; maple sugar, 50 pounds; cane sugar, 1,644 hogsheds of 1,000 pounds; molasses, 216,150 gallons; wine, 796 gallons, etc. The value of orchard products was $92,776, and of market-garden products, $76,500. The annexed table compares the crops of the great staples in 1840 and 1850:

Staples.	1840.	1850.	Movement.
Cane Sugar	329,744 pounds	1,644,000 pounds	incr. 1,314,256 pounds, or 398.57 per cent.
Ginned Cotton	163,392,396 "	120,360,400 "	decr. 43,031,996 " or 26.34 "
Tobacco	162,804 "	423,934 "	incr. 261,130 " or 160.25 "
Rice	12,984,732 "	38,950,691 "	incr. 26,565,959 " or 214.51 "

Products of Animals.—Wool, 990,019 pounds (in 1840, 371,303); butter, 4,640,559 pounds, and cheese, 46,976 pounds; and the value of animals slaughtered in the year had been $6,339,762. Silk cocoons were produced to the amount of $13 pounds (in 1840, 2,992½); and beeswax and honey, to that of 732,514 pounds.

Home-made manufactures for the year ending 30th June, 1850, were valued at $1,898,968 (in 1840, $1,467,630).

Manufactures.—Aggregate capital invested, $00,000,000; value of raw material, fuel, etc., consumed, $0,000,000; average number of hands employed, 00,000—males, 00,000, and females, 0,000; average monthly cost of labor—male, $00,000, and female, $00,000; annual value of products, $00,000,000. The whole number of manufacturing establishments, producing to the value of $500 and upward in 1850, was 1,407, and of these 85 were cotton factories, 3 woolen factories, 140 tanneries, and 10 iron establishments, of which 4 manufactured casting, 3 pig-iron, and 3 wrought iron.

GEORGIA.

The cotton manufactures employ a capital of $1,736,156; the cotton consumed in the year ending 30th June, 1850, was 20,230 bales, and the value of all raw material, fuel, etc., was $900,419; average hands employed—males 573, and females 1,399; monthly cost of labor—male, $12,725, and female, $10,352; value of entire products, $2,135,044, the products of the year having been 7,209,292 yards of sheeting, and 4,198,351 pounds of yarn.

The woolen manufactures have a capital invested amounting to $68,000, and consume annually 153,816 pounds of wool; value of all raw material, $30,392; hands employed—males 40, and females 38; monthly cost of labor—male $1,099, and female, $536; cloth manufactured, 340,660 yards; value of the entire products, $88,750.

The tanneries employ a capital of $262,555, and use annually 51,484 hides, and 21,705 skins, valued at $185,604; hands employed, 402; monthly wages, or cost of labor, $7,107; skins tanned, 21,705, and sides of leather tanned, 162,963—valued together at $361,586.

The various iron manufactures are in accordance with the following statistics :

Specified Manufactures.	Capital Invested.	Value of Raw Material.	Hands.		Monthly Wages.		Tons Produced.	Entire Value of Products.
			Male.	Fem.	Male.	Female.
Pig Iron	$26,000	$25,840	135	3	$17.44	$5.00	900	$57,300
Cast Iron	35,000	11,950	39	0	27.43	0.00	415	46,200
Wrought Iron	9,200	5,986	26	1	11.35	5.00	90	15,384

The total capital invested in the iron manufacture is thus $70,200: the value of raw material, fuel, etc., consumed, $43,776; and the total value of products, $118,884.

The branches of industry, others than those above enumerated, and forming the bulk of the manufactures of the State, consist chiefly of Mills of various descriptions, as saw and flouring mills, paper mills, boot and shoe shops, wheelwright shops, agricultural-implement manufacturers, etc., etc., which, taken together, and in connection with the national manufactures in which this State is engaged, constitute a very respectable manufacturing interest, and place Georgia in a proud position—first among its competitors of the Southern States.

Foreign Commerce.—Not more than a sixth of the commercial staples of Georgia are exported directly, or in shipping belonging to the State. The great bulk of its products are carried coastwise, and chiefly in northern vessels to northern ports, and thence trans-shipped to the foreign port; and even of the one-sixth, constituting the material of its direct foreign commerce, more than three-fifths is exported in vessels of foreign nations; besides, a large moiety of the products of Western Georgia is shipped at Appalachicola, in Florida. The exports to foreign countries, in the year ending 30th June, 1850, were valued at $7,551,943, of which $4,929,791 represents the value of merchandise carried in foreign bottoms; and the direct imports were valued at $636,964, of which $330,081 was the value of goods carried in foreign bottoms. The whole of the exports were of domestic origin. The total entries were 118 (57,017 tons), of which 71 (45,184 tons) were foreign; and the total clearances were 141 (72,563 tons), of which 83 (51,524 tons) were foreign. The whole of this commerce was done in the district of which Savannah is the port of entry. The amount of shipping owned in the State at the above-named period was 21,699 tons, distributed among the several collection districts as follows:

Collection Districts.	Registered.		Enrolled and Licensed.		Licensed (under 20 tons.)	Total Tonnage.	Navigated by Steam.
	Perm't.	Temp'ry.	Perm't.	Temp'ry.
Savannah	4,159	6,278	8,524	665	105	19,731	6,479
Sunbury	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Brunswick	—	—	524	—	10	534	—
Hardwick	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
St. Mary's	—	491	692	242	—	1,425	—

All the registered tonnage is employed in the foreign trade, and all the enrolled and licensed in the coasting trade: the vessels navigated by steam are of the latter classes. The number of vessels built in the year was 5—2 schooners and 3 steamers—with a total burden of 684 tons. The statistics of the foreign commerce of Georgia for a series of years exhibit the following movements:

Internal Communication.—The rivers of Georgia furnish in the aggregate a long line of navigable channels, which give the greater part of the interior a ready access by steamboat or bateaux to the Gulf and Atlantic seaboard. The names, length, etc., of the principal of these are given elsewhere. Georgia has also furnished itself with extensive and magnificent lines of internal improvements; her railways now in active operation have a length of 859 miles, and there are about 800 miles now in progress of construction, or for which charters have been obtained. The direction of the Georgia railways is generally between the seaboard and the interior; two lines, one from the port of Savannah and the other from that of Charleston, run south-west to a junction with the system of Tennessee railroads, terminating at Chattanooga, distant from the first-named place 432 miles, and from the latter 448 miles; and in their course give off several branches and connect with other railroads passing westward into Alabama, etc. Among the projected railroads the most important are those from Savannah and Brunswick to the Flint River and the seaports of Florida. Georgia has also two short canals: the Savannah and Ogeechee Canal, 16 miles long, and the Brunswick Canal, 12 miles long; the former extends from Savannah to the Ogeechee River, but is now unused, and the latter from Brunswick to the Altamaha River. The proportion of completed railroads to superficies in this State, in January, 1853, was as 1 mile of road to every 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ square miles, and to the population as 1 mile of road to every 1,055 persons.

Banks, etc.—In December, 1850, there were in the State 11 banks and 10 branch banks, and their condition in the aggregate was as follows: Liabilities—capital, $13,482,198; circulation, $11,771,270; deposits, $3,035,680; due other banks, $3,035,898, and other liabilities, $23,260; and assets—loans and discounts, $23,312,330; stocks, $963,611; real estate, $385,429; other investments, $236,205; due by other banks, $5,020,998; notes of other banks, $810,395; specie funds, $306,909, and specie $2,218,223. The branch banks are branches of the Bank of the State of Georgia, the head-quarters of which is at Savannah.

Government.—Georgia's first constitution was made in 1777; a second in 1785, and the one on which the present government is based, in 1795. It has subsequently undergone numerous amendments. Every citizen of the State, 21 years old, who has paid all taxes demanded for one year, and has resided in the county for six months next before an election, has the right to vote.

The legislature is styled the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives, the members of both of which are elected biennially. Representatives (130 in number) must be 21 years old and have been citizens of the State three years and of the United States seven years next before the election; senators (47 in number) are chosen in districts, and must be 24 years old, and have been citizens of the United States nine years. A census of the State is taken every seven years and representatives apportioned in accordance with its results.

The Governor is chief executive: he must be 30 years old, and have been a citizen of the United States twelve years and of the State six years, and be possessed of 500 acres of land, or $4,000 in other property above all debts. He is elected for two years by a popular majority vote, or in case there be not a choice, then one of the two candidates having the highest number of votes shall be elected by joint ballot of the General Assembly. In case of the office becoming vacant, the chair is filled by the President of the Senate, and after him by the Speaker of the House. The governor may veto a bill, but two-thirds of both houses subsequently voting in favor of the rejected bill, makes it law nevertheless.

The executive officers of the government of the State are—a Secretary of State, a State Treasurer, a Comptroller-general, a Surveyor-general, and a State Librarian. The Keeper of the Penitentiary, Commissioner of the Deaf and Dumb, and State Printer, come under this head.

The Judiciary consists of a Supreme Court, Superior Courts, and courts of inferior jurisdiction. The Supreme Court, for the correction of errors, consists of three judges, one of which is chief judge, elected by the General Assembly for such term as the law may provide, and are removable upon address of two-thirds of each house. The judges of the Superior Court are elected for six years, with jurisdiction exclusive in criminal cases and in land cases, and concurrent in all other civil cases. Justices of the inferior courts are elected by the people in districts. All judges have fixed salaries. The State is divided into thirteen circuits with a judge for each, viz.: Northern, Eastern, Southern, Western, Middle, Ocmulgee; Flint, Chattahoochee, Cherokee, Coweta, South-western, Macon, and Blue Ridge. Savannah and Augusta have special courts of Oyer and Terminer. Each county elects an "ordinary," who holds office for four years, and has the ordinary jurisdiction of a judge of probate. Sheriffs are appointed for two years, but not for two terms in succession.

On the institution of slavery, the constitution provides, that "There shall be no importation of slaves from Africa or any foreign place after October 1st, 1793, nor shall the legislature have power to free slaves without the owner's consent, or to prevent immigrants from bringing with them persons deemed slaves by any one of the United States. Slaves are protected in their persons, like free white persons, except in case of insurrection, and unless their "death should happen from accident in giving such slaves moderate correction." Amendments to the constitution, if passed by two-thirds of each house, shall be published six months before the next election of members of the General Assembly; and if passed in the same manner at the first session thereafter, shall be adopted.

The militia of Georgia consists of 78,699 men of all grades and arms, of which 5,050 are commissioned officers, and 73,649 non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates. Of the commissioned officers 39 are general officers, 91 general staff officers, 624 field officers, and 4,296 company officers.

The State benevolent institutions are an Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, under the management of commissioners, and another for Lunatics, in the hands of trustees.

Finances, Debt, etc.—The balance in the treasury on the 20th October, 1849, amounted to $354,697 52, and the receipts into the treasury during the next fiscal year amounted to $855,226 98—total means for the year $709,924 50. Disbursements for the same period $855,440 00, and balance remaining $854,484 50; less unavailing for execution warrants $256,746 00, leaving an actual balance of $67,738 50. The public debt of the State amounted to $1,529,072 22, and the bonds have from 15 to 20 years to run. Of this sum $72,000 are in sterling bonds, sold to Messrs. Reid, Irving & Co., of London, England, and the remainder Federal bonds. The semi-annual dividends, as well as the principal of the sterling bonds, are payable in London. The whole annual interest on the debt is $110,223 33. A committee of the legislature appointed to examine the State accounts in 1851, recommended that the balance then in the treasury should be applied to the redemption of the sterling bonds, and the State has a sinking fund for the ultimate redemption of the whole debt as it becomes due. The chief sources of income are the general tax and a special tax on bank stock. The principal items of expenditure are the pay of the legislature biennially, about $65,000, of the civil establishment, including judiciary, annually, about $45,000; the support of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, about $17,000; printing, an annual average of about $6,000, and miscellaneous expenses, about $12,000 annually. The items of interest on and reduction of the debt are additional to these. The assessed value of taxable property in the State in 1850 was $335,116,225.

Federal Representation.—Georgia, in accordance with the present law regulating the distribution of members to the United States House of Representatives, occupies eight seats in that body.

Georgia is a diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and with all Florida east of Appalachicola Bay, forms the Roman Catholic diocese of Savannah.

Education.—The State of Georgia in 1850 had 23 colleges or universities, 237 academies and high schools, and 822 common or primary schools. The chief collegiate institutions were, the University at Athens, founded in 1785, and in 1850 had 8 professors, 646 alumni, of which 65 were in the ministry, and 155 students, and a library of 13,600 volumes; Oglethorpe College, founded 1836, and located at Medway, had 6 professors, 83 alumni (13 ministers), 85 students, and a library of 4,500 volumes; Emory College, founded 1837 at Oxford, and belonging to the Methodists, had 5 professors, 133 alumni (16 ministers), 115 students, and 1,700 volumes; Mercer University, founded 1838 at Penfield, had 7 professors, 32 alumni (10 ministers), 71 students, and 3,400 volumes; and Wesleyan Female College at Macon, founded 1839, had 8 professors, 156 alumni, and 198 students. The academies had 400 teachers and 14,296 students, and the common or primary schools 2,008 teachers and 26,000 schools. Libraries 517—volumes 117,594.

Pauperism and Crime.—The whole number of persons who received support from the public funds within the year ending 1st June, 1850, was 1,036, of whom 973 were native born and 58 foreigners; and the number of paupers at that date was $54—$25 natives and 29 foreigners. Annual cost of support $27,520. The whole number of persons convicted of crime in the year ending as above was 85, of whom 66 were natives and 19 foreign born; and the whole number in prison at that date was 41. The State Penitentiary is located at Milledgeville.

Historical Sketch.—Georgia was the last settled of the old States; the Charter under which the colony was founded was granted in 1732 by George II.—in honor of whom it received its name—to the Trustees for the Establishing the Colony of Georgia. The double purpose of making the settlement was to relieve the distresses of the poor at home, and to secure the frontiers of the Carolinas from the Indians and Spaniards. In 1733 General Oglethorpe, one of the trustees, conducted the first colonists to the Savannah, and several bodies of Germans and Highlanders were soon after brought over. The lands were held on a military tenure. The country was repeatedly traversed by the Spaniards from Florida, who considered the occupation of the English as an encroachment upon their domain. In 1752 the proprietary government was abolished, and Georgia became a royal colony. The original limits of the State included the territory now divided into the two thriving States of Alabama and Mississippi.

At the commencement of the Revolutionary War, Georgia was only in the infancy of her strength, and had just begun to enjoy peace and the advantages of a better system of government. The inhabitants knew the operation of the royal government only by its favorable contrast with that of the Trustees. Notwithstanding, the people did not hesitate to take part with their northern brethren. During the war that ensued, Georgia was overrun by the British troops, and the principal inhabitants were compelled to abandon their possessions and fly into the neighboring States. In proportion to their numbers, the exertions and losses of her citizens were as great as in any of the States.

After the war Georgia suffered on her frontiers from the incursions of the Creek Indians, whose hostility had been too often provoked by the whites. In 1790 a treaty was concluded with this nation, by which the boundaries of Georgia were established. In 1802 the Creeks ceded to the United States a large tract of country, which has since been ceded by the United States to Georgia, and forms the south-west corner of the State. Georgia possessed—as included within her limits—a claim to an immense body of Western land, of which in 1795 the Legislature sold a large portion, said to have contained 22,000,000 acres, to a company, by which it was again sold to individuals. In the succeeding year the Legislature declared the sale unconstitutional, and on the ground that it was obtained through bribery, they declared it to be void, and ordered all the records to be burned. In 1802 Georgia ceded to the United States all the lands west of the Chattahoochee River, and of a certain line including the contested lands; and in 1814 Congress passed an act by which a compromise was made with the purchasers, who received a certain amount of public stock. The history of Georgia since this period records no territorial or government changes; but it is full of instruction, recording the gradual progress of a people in the arts, agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, from a small beginning to an elevation attained by few other members of the Confederation, in the escutcheon of which this State is one of the brightest stars.

MILLEDGEVILLE is the political capital of the State.

GEORGIA, t. and p. v., Franklin co., Verm.: 41 m. N. W. Montpelier. GRAFENBERG, p. v., Adams co., Penn.: 49 m. S. S. W. Harrisburg.

GRAFTON county, N. Hamp. Situate W., and contains 1,437 sq. m. Drained by Ammonoosuck r. and other affluents of Connecticut r., its W. boundary, and the head waters of Merrimac and Saco rivers. Surface elevated and rough, with good mill streams; soil generally good, and adapted to grass or grain. Squam Lake, on its E. border, and Newfound Lake within it, are fine bodies of water and very attractive to strangers. Wool growing is successful and general. Farms 5,063; manuf. 424; dwell. 7,598, and pop.—wh. 42,316, fr. col. 27—total 42,343. Capital: Haverhill. Public Works: Northern (N. H.) R. R.; Boston, Concord, and Montreal R. R.

GRAFTON, p. v., Jersey co., Ill.: on the E. side of Mississippi r., 2 m. below the confluence of the Illinois, 71 m. S. W. Springfield. It is situate on an elevated slope of land under the bluffs, and has a good steamboat landing. Pop. about 1,200.

GRAFTON, t. and p. v., Worcester co., Mass.: 7 m. E. Worcester, 35 m. W. S. W. Boston. Drained by Blackstone r. and its tributaries, which afford excellent water-power. Surface varied; soil excellent. The principal v. is located centrally, and there are others, as Farnumville on the S. and New England Village on the N. of it. The Grafton station being 35 m. from Boston, and here diverges the Branch R. R. to Milbury on the Worcester and Providence R. R.; and the Blackstone Canal passes through the S. W. corner. The t. has large manufactures, and 3,610 inhabitants.

GRAFTON, t. and p. o., Grafton co., N. Hamp.: 35 m. N. W. Concord. Drained by Smith's r. of the Merrimac, which rises in several small ponds in this t. Surface hilly; soil rocky, but there is some good land. Glass Mountain, 150 feet perpendicular height, furnishes mica, or isinglass, an article of export. There are numerous mills on the streams, and the inhabitants number 1,322. The Northern New Hampshire R. R. passes through the t., 44 m. by route from Concord.

GRAFTON, t. and p. o., Rensselaer co., N. Y.: 16 m. N. E. Albany. Drained by Poestenkill and other smaller creeks. Surface hilly and well timbered; soil, clay loam. There are several mills in the t., and a pop. of 2,197 souls.

GRAFTON, p. v., Lorain co., Ohio: on the E. branch of Black r., 103 m. N. N. E. Columbus. At this point the Cleveland, Norwalk, and Toledo R. R. diverges from the Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati R. R., 25 m. from Cleveland.

GRAFTON, t. and p. v., Windham co., Verm.: 77 m. S. Montpelier. Drained by Saxton's and William's rivers. Surface uneven; soil generally fertile. The v. lies on the N. side of Saxton's r. The t. has some manufactures, and exports soapstone, which is abundant and of fine quality.

GRAMPTON HILLS, p. o., Clearfield co., Penn.: 97 m. W. N. W. Harrisburg.

GRANBY, t. and p. o., Essex co., Verm.: 48 m. E. N. E. Montpelier. Drained by the heads of Paul's stream and of Moose r. Surface elevated, forming a watershed. It is an inhospitable country and thinly inhabited. Pop. about 200.

GRANBY, t. and p. o., Hartford co., Conn.: 162 m. N. N. W. Hartford. Drained by tributaries of Farmington r. Surface hilly and rough—Barn Door Hills rise 400 or 500 feet high; soil generally stubborn, but there is considerable good farming lands. The t. has several pleasant villages and considerable manufactures. Pop. 2,498. This t. was taken from Simsbury in 1786, and contains the famous Simsbury copper mines—the Old State Prison of Connecticut. This odious place, unfit for the residence of the worst of criminals, is a pit or cavern more than 50 feet deep, dark, damp, and dismal, and in this infernal region the State convicts were immured; as such it was used for a period of 40 years, to the no small disgrace of our Puritan friends of the East.

GRANBY, t. and p. v., Hampshire county, Mass.: 76 m. W. by S. Boston. Drained by creeks of Connecticut r. Surface in the N. hilly—Mt. Holyoke range bounding the t. in that direction, and in the S. diversified, with a fine soil. The mountainous parts are well wooded. It produces much garden stuff, which finds a market in Chicopee and Springfield; and it has several woolen factories, mills, etc. Pop. 1,038.

GRAND BLANC, t. and p. v., Genesee co., Mich.: 44 m. E. N. E. Lansing. Drained by Thread cr. of Flint r. and its affluents. Surface hilly; soil, deep black mold, well wooded and fertile. The v. lies on the left bank of the r., and is a considerable place.

GRAND COTEAU, p. v., St. Landry par., La.: on the W. of Vermillion r., 55 m. W. Baton Rouge. Here is St. Charles College, a Roman Catholic institution, founded 1835; in 1850 it had 21 professors and 103 students. Its library contains 4,000 volumes.

GRAND CÔTE PRAIRIE, p. o., Perry co., Ill.: on the prairie so called, 113 m. S. Springfield.

GRAND DETOUR, p. o., Ogle co., Ill.: on a peninsula formed by a great bend of Rock r., 142 m. N. Springfield. It is a flourishing v., with considerable manufactures and a good trade. Pop. about 600.

GRAND ECORE, p. o., Natchitoches par., La.: on the S. W. side of Red r., at the entrance of Old r., 144 m. N. W. Baton Rouge.

GRAND FALLS, p. o., Newton co., Mo.: on the N. side of Neh-hah r., at the falls, 174 m. S. W. Jefferson City.

GRAND GULE, p. v., Claiborne co., Miss.: on the E. bank of Mississippi r., 55 m. W. S. W. Jackson. The river, by a remarkable bend here, forms what is denominated the Grand Gulf. It contains a town-hall, hospital, market-house, theatre, etc., and has several manufacturing establishments and mechanic shops, numerous stores, and a population of about 1,200. It enjoys a considerable trade in cotton, and supplies a wide neighborhood with provisions and merchandise.

GRAND HAVEN, p. v., and cap. Mich.: on the S. bank of Grand r., near its entrance into Lake Michigan. This is one of the best harbors on the W. side of the peninsula, and is a point made by steamers passing down the lake, and steamboats ply on the river as far as Grand Rapids. There is never less than 12 feet water on the bar, and opposite the harbor the depth varies from 15 to 30 feet, with a width of 65 rods. A light-house is erected at its mouth. The v. contains a court-house, etc., spacious warehouses, several steam saw and other mills, numerous stores, and is in a highly flourishing condition. In point of natural advantages, it has an excellent location; it is elevated 25 or 30 feet above the river, and is very healthy. Population about 900.

GRAND ISLAND, p. o., Erie co., N. Y.: 264 m. W. by N. Albany. Grand Island forms a part of Tonawanda co., and is situate in Niagara r., equidistant between Black Rock and Niagara Falls. It is 9 m. long, and in its broadest part 6 m. wide, with an area of 17,851 acres. The land is level, well timbered, and very fertile. The river is deep, close in shore, and affords access to any part of the island. The v. of Whitehaven, at which the p. o. is kept, is located on its E. bank. This island was selected by M. M. Noah, on which to build a city and establish a colony of Jews, with the view of making it the "Ararat," or resting-place of that despised people. A monument, 15 feet high, with suitable inscriptions, was erected here by the projector in Sept., 1825, and is still standing. The undertaking was abandoned in consequence of the scheme having been non-approved of by the Rabbi of Europe.

GRAND ISLE county, Verm. Situated N. W., consisting principally of two islands in N. part of Lake Champlain, and contains 76 sq. m. Surface gently elevated; soil highly productive and well tilled. Their flocks of sheep form no small part of their wealth. Farms 839; manuf. 8; dwell. 691, and pop.—wh. 4,142, fr. col. 8—total 4,145. Capital: North Hero. Public Works: Vermont and Canada Railroad.

GRAND ISLE, t. and p. v., Grand Isle co., Verm.: 40 m. N. W. Montpelier. The t. consists of the N. part of a large island of Lake Champlain so called, and has a fertile soil, producing the grains and fruits. Marble, limestone, and rock crystals abound. The v. is a small settlement in its centre. Pop. 666.

GRAND LAKE, p. o., Chicot co., Ark.: on the W. side of the Mississippi r., near the S. E. corner of the State, 152 m. S. E. Little Rock.

GRAND LAKE, Me.: a large collection of water lying on the E. border of Maine, and partly in New Brunswick. It contains a large number of islands, and receives the waters of many small lakes and rivers, and is the chief source of St. Croix river.

GRAND LEDGE, p. o., Eaton co., Mich.: 12 m. W. Lansing. Here is a ledge of sandstone, 20 feet high, along the N. bank of Grand r., and in the neighborhood, iron ore of fine quality is abundant.

GRAND MARSH, p. o., Columbia co., Wisc.: 29 m. N. W. Madison.

GRAND PRAIRIE, t. and p. o., Marion co., Ohio: 49 m. N. N. W. Columbus. Drained by Scioto r. Surface level; soil deep and black mold, very fertile. Pop. 474.

GRAND PRAIRIE, p. o., Prairie co., Ark.: 81 m. E. N. E. Little Rock.

GRAND PRAIRIE, t. and p. o. Marquette co., Wisc.: 49 m. N. by E. Madison.

GRAND RAPIDS, p. v., and cap. Kent co., Mich.: on the S. bank of Grand r., at the rapids so called, 59 m. W. N. W. Lansing. It contains a court-house, jail, etc.; numerous mills and workshops, warehouses, stores, etc., and about 3,000 inhabitants. It is one of the most important places in Michigan, and has great conveniences for an extensive commerce, being the natural depôt of the country above. There are published in the village two newspapers, the "G. R. Inquirer" (dem.), and the "G. River Eagle" (whig), weekly issues. Building material of every description is found in the neighborhood, and salt springs within a few miles. It is approached to the foot of the rapids by lake steamers and other craft, and a canal is proposed to overcome the fall, which is here 15 feet, and by employing the entire volume of water, an immense hydraulic power can be obtained. On the opposite side of the river are Indian mounds and burial places, and many remains of ancient habitations and corn fields. Pop. of v. 2,646.—of t. 3,149.

GRAND RAPIDS, p. v., Portage co., Wisc.: on Wisconsin river, 93 m. N. by W. Madison. The river in this co. is full of rapids and portages, affording water-power of great extent, which is used in many places for the transportation of lumber, large quantities of which are annually sent down to St. Louis. The pineries commence about 80 m. above Fort Winnebago, and here a railroad, 2 m. long, the first in Wisconsin, has been constructed to convey the logs from the forest to the mills.

GRAND RIVER, p. o., Caldwell co., Mo.: 123 m. N. W. Jefferson City.

GRAND RIVER, p. o., Wayne county, Ia.: 112 m. S. W. Iowa City.

GRAND river, Utah Terr.: a large constituent of the Rio Colorado of California. It rises in the Rocky Mountains, in the neighborhood of Long's Peak and the "Parks," whence its course is generally W. S. W. to a junction with the main river, in about 85° N. lat. In its upper course it has many rapids and falls.

GRAND river, Mich.: the largest stream lying wholly within the State. It rises in Washtenaw and Hillsdale counties by two branches, which unite in Jackson co. From this point the river has a very serpentine course, but runs generally in a W. direction to Lake Michigan. It is about 270 m. long, including its windings, and at its mouth, between 50 and 65 rods wide, and of sufficient depth to admit vessels of less than 12 feet draft. It is navigable 240 miles for batteaux, and receives in its course as its principal tributaries, Rouge, Flat, Maple, Looking-glass, and Red Cedar rivers, from the N., and Thornapple r. from the S. It is navigable for steamboats 40 m. to the Great Rapids, below which it has nowhere less than 4 feet water. The river is subject to freshets, and the intervalles in some places to inundations. At the Rapids it sometimes rises 15 feet, but at its mouth seldom more than a foot. Many flourishing villages are now located on the banks of Grand river.

GRAND TRAVERSE, p. o., Michilimackinac co., Mich.: 172 m. N. N. W. Lansing.

GRAND TRAVERSE bay: a considerable inlet of Lake Michigan, which sets up into the land in the N. W. part of Mackinac county.

GRAND TRAVERSE islands, Mich.: a cluster of islands located at the entrance of Green Bay into Lake Michigan. They number ten or twelve, the largest of which are Palawaton, Plum, Detroit, Brâle, etc.

GRAND VIEW, p. o., Edgar co., Ill.: at the head of Big cr. of Wabash r., 93 m. E. by S. Springfield. It is in the midst of a beautiful and fertile rolling prairie. Pop. 1,337.

GRAND VIEW, p. v., Louisa co., Ia.: about 2 m. W. of Muscatine Slough, 31 m. S. S. E. Iowa City.

GRAND VIEW, t. and p. v., Washington co., Ohio: 106 m. E. S. E. Columbus. Drained by creeks of Ohio r., which makes its S. E. border. Surface on the r. fertile bottoms, and in the uplands hilly, and fit only for grass. The v. lies on the Ohio, about 12 m. above Newport. Pop. 1,154.

GREAT BARRINGTON, t. and p. v., Berkshire co., Mass.: 118 m. W. Boston. Drained by Housatonic r. and its branches. Surface, except in the valley of the river, uneven and hilly; soil generally fertile, and on the hills fine for grazing. Monument Mountain is a lofty eminence, and presents much wild and picturesque scenery. Iron ore and variegated marble abound. The v. is situate on the E. side of the river, and on the line of the Housatonic R. R., 85 m. from Bridgeport. It is a considerable place, and has several manufactures. Van Deusenville is a pleasant v. 2 m. N. of the principal v. Two newspapers are published in the t., the "Berkshire Courier" (whig) and the "Transcript" (whig), both weeklies. The manufactures consist of cotton and woolen goods, boots and shoes, hats, pig iron, tinware, etc. Pop. of t. 3,263.

GREAT BAY, Rockingham co., N. Hamp.: in the S. E. part of the State. It is formed by the united waters of Swamscot, Winnicut, and Lamprey rivers, and its waters pass N. E. through Little Bay, where Oyster r. unites with the current which passes into Piscataqua r. It is 4 m. wide.

GREAT BAY, Belknap co., N. Hamp.: an expansion of the outlet of Lake Winnipiseogee, and discharges its waters through Winnipiseogee r. into the Connecticut. Round and Long bays are situate between the lake and Great Bay, and there are two small bays in the river below.

GREAT BEND, p. v., Jefferson co., N. Y.: at the great bend of Black r., 133 m. N. W. Albany. It contains several mills and about 200 inhabitants. A bridge here crosses the Black river.

GREAT BEND, p. o., Meigs county, Ohio: 92 m. S. S. E. Columbus.

GREAT BEND, t. and p. v., Susquehanna co., Penn.: 132 m. N. N. E. Harrisburg. Drained by affluents of Susquehanna r. Surface hilly; soil generally good, especially so in the valleys. The v. is situate on both side of Susquehanna r., over which is a large covered bridge. The two parts of the v. are about a mile apart. It contains several spacious stores and about 400 inhabitants. As a station on the New York and Erie R. R. it is important, for it is placed at a great converging point of trade with many thriving towns in Pennsylvania, and the Legget's Gap R. R. runs hence into the Lackawanna coal and iron region. A large amount of business is done here, and the v. is rapidly filling up with an enterprising population. Pop. of the t. 1,150.

GREAT BRIDGE, p. o., Norfolk co., Virg.: 72 m. S. E. Richmond.

GREAT CROSSINGS, p. o., Scott co., Ky.: on Elkhorn cr., 5 m. W. of Georgetown and 16 m. E. N. E. Frankfort. The Choctaw Academy was formerly located here, which provided, under the superintendence of the War Department, for the education of Indians.

GREAT FALLS, p. v., Strafford co., N. Hamp.: on the W. side of Salmon r., at the falls, 33 m. E. Concord. This is a large and beautiful v., with extensive manufactures of cotton, etc., for which its immense water-power peculiarly adapts it. It lies at the point of junction of the Great Falls Branch of the Boston and Maine R. R., the Great Falls and Conway R. R., and the York and Cumberland R. R. Two newspapers are published here, the "G. F. Transcript" and the "G. F. Sketcher," both issued weekly. Pop. about 2,000.

GREAT MILLS, p. o., St. Mary's co., Md.: on a cr. of St. Mary's r., 53 m. S. Annapolis.

GREAT OKONAGON lake and river, Oreg. Ter.: a long lake, or rather series of lakes, stretching between 48° and 50° N. lat., and forming the sources of the Okonagon r., a branch of the Columbia r., at the confluence with which is located Fort Okonagon, an establishment of the Hudson Bay Company.

GREAT PEE DEE river, S. Car.: a continuation of the Yaden r. It rises under the latter name in Caldwell and Wilkes counties, N. Carolina, and continues thence in an E. direction to the W. line of Forsyth county, when it abruptly turns S., and in a S. E. course passes over the border into S. Carolina, when it is called Great Pee Dee. Its principal affluents are Lynch's cr. and Little Pedee r., both considerable streams. Uniting with Waccamaw r. a little below Georgetown, it enters and forms Winayaw Bay, which communicates with the Atlantic about 12 m. below the union. This river is navigable for boats of 60 or 70 tons burden for 200 m. Little Pee Dee r. enters it about 32 m. up, and Lynch's cr. about 47 m. up—both are boatable for a considerable distance.

GREAT SALT LAKE county, Utah. Situate on the E. and S. shores of the Great Salt Lake, and comprises a district lying in the immediate vicinity. Surface low and level on the shore, but soon rises into mountains, which encircle the basin of the lake at no great distance. The soil is good, and, under cultivation, highly productive. Salt of a good quality, and in great quantities, is obtained from the lake; and on its shores the Mormons have settled, and emigrants for the Pacific shore here find refreshments and a halting place, before entering on the California desert. Farms 505; manuf. 6; dwell. 1,283, and pop.—wh. 6,142, fr. col. 15—total 6,157. Capital: Great Salt Lake City.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, p. city, and cap. Great Salt Lake co., Utah Ter. (See SALT LAKE CITY.) The precise name of this is "City of the Great Salt Lake."

GREAT SALT LAKE, Utah Ter.: a noted lake in the great California basin. It lies in lat. 41° 10' 42" N., and long. 112° 21' 05" W. (the astronomical position of an island in the lake). It communicates with Utah Lake through a strait called Jordan r., but has a somewhat lower level. Utah Lake is fresh water, while Great Salt Lake is intensely salt, and its shores and bottom are incrustated with salt—the former for a width of several miles. The Mormons are settled in its neighborhood, and their original settlement and chief city, the City of the Great Salt Lake, is located on the E. side of Jordan r. The lake and its vicinity has been surveyed by Captain Stansbury, whose able report to Congress is a work of great interest and value. In the valley of this lake the most valuable lands of the Territory are located, and of these the Mormons have got possession.

GREAT VALLEY, t. and p. o., Cattaraugus co., N. Y.: 247 m. W. by S. Albany. Drained by Great Valley, Tunianguant, and other creeks of Alleghany r. Surface somewhat broken, rising from the valley of the Alleghany; soils, clay loam, and fertile. The v. is a station on the Erie R. R., and is on the Reservation belonging to the Seneca Nation, now numbering about 700. It commands the business of the valley, in which Ellicottville, is situate. Pop. 1,638.

GREAT WORKS, p. v., Penobscot co., Me.: on the E. side of Penobscot r., at the confluence of Great Works stream, 74 m. N. E. Augusta. The stream so called is an important branch of the Penobscot, into which it falls opposite the Indian settlement of Old Town; it has many mill sites, and along its banks considerable manufactures are carried on.

GREECE, t. and p. o., Monroe co., N. Y.: 203 m. W. N. W. Albany. Drained by creeks flowing through small bays to Lake Ontario, which lies on its W. border, and Genesee r. lies on its E. boundary. Surface undulating; soil, gravelly, sandy, and clay loams. Charlotte and Adams Basin are post-offices in this t. Pop. 4,219.

GREELAND DEPOT, p. o., Rockingham co., N. Hamp.

GREEN BANK, p. o., Pocahontas co., Virg.: on Deep cr. of Greenbrier r., 146 m. W. N. W. Richmond. It has several mills and mechanic shops, and about 80 inhabitants.

HAMPDEN county, Mass. Situate S. W., and contains 585 sq. m. The Connecticut divides it about equally in its S. course, and it is drained by its affluents—W. by Westfield and Agawam rivers, and—E. by Ware and Chicopee; the Quinnebaug r. also rises in the E. Surface much diversified; in the W. very hilly and broken, except on the streams; in the E. less broken, and pleasantly varied, and on the banks of the Connecticut a narrow strip of low, level meadows. These are unsurpassed in fertility and loveliness. Aside from them there is much prime land in both sections of the county. The W. has some timber; but the great business is manufactures—these, hitherto confined to Palmer, Westfield, Chicopee, and Springfield, now find the greatest power at Holyoke, where a dam across the Connecticut, built in 1849, affords the best water-power in the State. There are cotton and woolen factories in Palmer and Chicopee; whip and cigar in Westfield; and railroad car and locomotive in Springfield. Farms 2,616; manuf. 889; dwell. 9,088, and pop.—wh. 50,785, fr. col. 496—total 51,281. Capital: Springfield. Public Works: Western R. R.; Connecticut River R. R.; Chicopee Falls Branch R. R.; New London, Willimantic, and Palmer R. R.; Amherst and Belchertown R. R.; New Haven, Hartford, and Springfield R. R.; and New Haven and Northampton R. R.

HAMPDEN, t. and p. o., Columbia co., Wis.: 20 m. N. by E. Madison. Drained by a head branch of Rock r. Surface rolling; soil deep mold and well wooded. Pop. 493.

HAMPSHIRE county, Mass. Situate W. centrally, and contains 538 sq. m. Divided from N. to S. by the Connecticut river, and watered by its affluents, which afford much water-power. Surface much broken in the W.; in the E. hilly, and on the Connecticut r. a beautiful meadow. Soil in the middle rich meadow, producing great crops of corn, clover, hay, broom-corn, and tobacco; in the W. excellent grazing land, with fine dairies; and in the E. fine farms, except on the highest ground. Mount Tom and Mount Holyoke, and their adjacent ranges of hills, are well wooded, and much maple sugar is made. Small factories occupy most of the streams, and every kind of "Yankee notion" is produced. Much paper is made, and at Easthampton are the largest button factories in the United States. A rich lead and silver mine, closed by accident, has been reopened in Southampton; zinc-blende is largely dug in Hatfield, and fine building stone is found in Pelham. Farms 2,965; manuf. 319; dwell. 5,905, and pop.—wh. 35,4 $\frac{1}{2}$, fr. col. 327—total 35,732. Capital: Northampton. Public Works: Connecticut River R. R.; Western R. R.; Amherst and Belchertown R. R.; New Haven and Northampton R. R.

HAMPSHIRE county, Virg. Situate N., and contains 888 sq. m. Drained by S. branch of the Potomac r., Great and Little Cacapon r., North r., Patterson's cr., and other affluents of the Potomac r., which forms its N. boundary. It lies between the Blue Ridge and East Alleghany mountains, the latter intersecting the W. half. The surface is elevated and broken, affording many mill privileges, and excellent grazing. All the grains yield finely in the numerous valleys, and the mountains are well timbered, furnishing material for many saw-mills. Farms 1,063; manuf. 57; dwell. 2,035, and pop.—wh. 12,389, fr. col. 214, sl. 1,433—total 14,036. Capital: Romney. Public Works: Baltimore and Ohio R. R.

Drained E. by branches of Crooked cr., a tributary of the Illinois, and W. by affluents of the Mississippi, which divides it from Iowa and Missouri. Surface rolling; soil fertile, especially near the Mississippi; the E. has much prairie, and the county is deficient in timber, though a belt of forest extends along the Mississippi. All the grains thrive, and manufactures are increasing. This will long be remembered as the chosen seat of Joe Smith's adherents, and the field of the Mormon difficulties in 1846. Their half-finished temple remains to tell of the fanaticism and intolerance that in this, the 19th century, could array an otherwise noble people against their brethren, because of their opinions on religion. Farms 1,167; manuf. 49; dwell. 2,585, and pop.—wh. 14,633, fr. col. 19—total 14,652. Capital: Carthage.

HANCOCK county, Ind. Situate E. centrally, and contains 308 sq. m. Drained by Blue r. and Sugar and Brandywine creeks. Surface level or gently undulating, and generally timbered; soil rich, producing wheat, corn, the grasses, etc., in profusion. Farms 1,176; manuf. 36; dwell. 1,635, and pop.—wh. 9,595, fr. col. 103—total 9,693. Capital: Greenfield. Public Works: Indiana Central R. R., Indianapolis and Bellefontaine R. R.

HANCOCK county, Ia. Situate N. middle, and contains 576 sq. m. Drained by Boone r., a branch of the Des Moines, and the heads of Cedar and Iowa rivers. But little settled, and unorganized in 1850.

HANCOCK county, Ky. Situate N. in W. part, and contains 158 sq. m. Drained by Black Fork cr. and Indian cr., affluents of the Ohio, which washes its whole N. border. Surface considerably broken. Soil of average fertility. Tobacco is cultivated. Large deposits of coal exist, and are wrought successfully; iron ore is also found. Farms 819; manuf. 15; dwell. 551, and pop.—wh. 3,216, fr. col. 15, sl. 622—total, 3,553. Capital: Hawesville.

HANCOCK county, Me. Situate S. E., and contains 1,656 sq. m. Drained by Union r. and its branches. It has the Atlantic on the S., and Penobscot bay and river on the W., which furnish it with good harbors. The coast is covered with many islands, some large, and the fisheries form an important branch of trade. The surface is somewhat hilly; timber and water-power abundant, and lumber the great export. Soil good; wool is grown, and many potatoes exported. Farms 2,271; manuf. 205; dwell. 5,550, and pop.—wh. 34,343, fr. col. 29—total 34,372. Capital: Castine.

HANCOCK county, Miss. Situate S., and contains 933 sq. m. Drained—E. by Wolf r., emptying into St. Louis Bay, and—W. by branches of Pearl r., its boundary toward Louisiana, a large navigable stream flowing into Lake Borgne. Surface rolling or low and level; soil mostly unproductive, with a growth of pine on much of it. Cotton and rice are the products. Farms 77; manuf. 11; dwell. 492, and pop.—wh. 2,444, fr. col. 12, sl. 1,216—total 3,672. Capital: Shieldsboro'.

HANCOCK county, Ohio. Situate N. W. centrally, and contains 523 sq. m. Drained by branches of Blanchard's Fork of Maumee r. and heads of Portage r., both of which flow into Lake Erie. Surface undulating; soil very productive of all the grains, on which much pork is fattened. It is well wooded, and has several good mill streams. Farms 1,636; manuf. 35; dwell. 2,524, and pop.—wh. 16,725, fr. col. 26—total 16,751. Capital: Findlay. Public Works: Findlay Branch R. R.

HANCOCK county, Tenn. Situate N. E., and contains 312 sq. m. Drained by Powells and Clinch rivers, heads of the Tennessee. Mill-sites are numerous—and timber plenty and convenient. HARRINGTON, t. and p. o., Washington co., Me.: 104 m. E. Augusta. The t. occupies two peninsulas, having Pleasant River Bay on the E., and Narragaus Bay on its W. side; and the rivers emptying into these, both of the same name, afford extensive water-power. It has numerous mills, etc. Pop. 968.

HARRIS county, Ga. Situate W. centrally, and contains 414 sq. m. Drained by Long Canoe, Pine Mountain, and Mulberry creeks, affluents of Chatahoochee r., its W. boundary. Pine Mountain crosses the N., and the surface is much diversified. The soil is good, producing corn and the grains. Farms 878; manuf. 73; dwell. 1,175, and pop.—wh. 6,709, fr. col. 30, sl. 7,982—total 14,721. Capital: Hamilton.

HARRIS county, Tex. Situate S. E., and contains 1,656 sq. m. Drained by Cedar Bayou, its E. boundary; San Jacinto r., which flows through the E. half, Spring cr., its branch, and N. line of county; Buffalo Bayou and its affluents, Sims, Brays, Horse Pen, White Oak, Hunting, Green's, and Carpenter's bayous, and by Clear cr., on its S. border, all of which empty into Galveston Bay. It is finely situated for the transportation of its products, having Galveston Bay in the S. E. and several large rivers; the San Jacinto navigable 40 m., Buffalo Bayou 30, and Cedar cr. 20, all deep streams, with scarcely perceptible currents. The streams are lined with forests, but most of the county is open prairie, with a rolling surface in the N. The soil just on the coast is of moderate fertility, but in the middle and N. consists of a deep black mold, with a substratum of shells, and the E. has some of the best land in East Texas. Its timber is very valuable, consisting of pine on San Jacinto r. and Buffalo Bayou, and elsewhere of magnolia, cypress, cedar, and several kinds of oak. Rotten limestone and beds of clay abound in the N. Cotton is the great staple, but all the grains yield largely, and sugar is successfully cultivated. In the S. E. was fought the famous Battle of San Jacinto. Farms 197; manuf. 42; dwell. 834, and pop.—wh. 3,756, fr. col. 7, sl. 905—total 4,663. Capital: Houston. Public Works: Houston and Galveston R. R., and Buffalo Bayou, Brazos, and Colorado R. R.

HARRISBURGH, p. city, and cap. Dauphin co., Penn., and capital of the State of Pennsylvania: on the E. bank of Susquehanna r., in lat. 40° 16' N., and long. 76° 50' W., 110 m. N. Washington. The river though voluminous is not navigable here, except for rafts, which descend the current; but it is accessible from all parts by canal or railroad, and is a very flourishing interior market. The city is built on elevated ground, and commands a varied and pleasant prospect of the surrounding country. The public buildings are the State capitol, the court-house, the county prison, a Masonic Hall, the Lancasterian school, churches of all denominations, some built at great expense, school-houses, etc. The Capitol, or State house, is an imposing structure, consisting of a main building and two wings, each adorned with a portico and Ionic pillars; the central edifice is 130 feet wide, 80 feet deep, and 108 feet from the ground to the top of the dome, and the whole is surrounded by an open area, adorned with two walks and an iron railing. Harrisburg has considerable manufactures and most of the mechanic arts; its commerce is extensive. The press of Harrisburg consists of 1 daily newspaper and 7 published weekly; the daily is the "H. American" (whig), of which there is also a weekly edition, and the weeklies are the "Vaterland Vechter" (whig), the "Democratic Union" (dem.), the "Pennsylvania Telegraph" (whig), the "Key-stone" (dem.), the "Church Advocate" (relig.), and the "Pennsylvania Intelligencer" (whig). Water is supplied to the city through iron pipes from a reservoir on Mount Airy, into which it is elevated from the Susquehanna. The city is lighted with gas, and in its general police is one of the best conducted communities in the Union. Pop. in 1820 about 3,000; in 1830, 4,307; in 1840, 5,980, and in 1850, 8,173. Harrisburg bridge, over the Susquehanna, is a fine covered structure, extending to an island and thence to the opposite bank, 2,576 feet long, 40 feet wide, and 50 feet above the river, and below is the bridge of the Cumberland Valley R. R., also a substantial structure.

HARTFORD county, Conn. Situate N. centrally, and contains 727 sq. m. Intersected from N. to S. by the Connecticut, and drained by its affluents, Farmington and Mill rivers on the W., and on the E. Podunk, Scantic, and other small streams. Surface much diversified, from alluvial meadows, annually overflowed, to high rocky hills; soils also various, but generally very fertile, and under admirable cultivation. In the E. are unsurpassed farms and dairies, in the middle the delightful and invaluable meadows of the Connecticut basin, and on the W. streams, land almost as good. The facilities for manufactures are great, and all improved. The articles made embrace almost every thing in use; but for value and quality, those best known are carpets, powder, axes, clocks, tinware, and iron castings. For commerce and transportation, it has the Connecticut navigable through it, and railroads in every direction. It embraces one capital of the State and the penitentiary in its limits, besides munificent benevolent and literary establishments. In the S. W. is a copper mine of great extent and exceedingly rich ore. Iron is also found. Farms 8,550; manuf. 734; dwell. 11,818, and pop.—wh. 68,756, fr. col. 1,210—total 69,966. Capital: Hartford. Public Works: Farmington Canal (little used); Springfield, Hartford and New Haven R. R.; New Haven and Northampton (or Canal) R. R.; Hartford, Providence and Fishkill R. R.; Collinsville Branch R. R.

HARTFORD, p. city, and cap. Hartford co., Conn., and one of the capitals of the State: on the W. side of Connecticut r., at the head of ship navigation, 50 m. from its mouth, in lat. 41° 45' 59" N., and long. 72° 40' 45" W., 335 m. N. E. Washington. The site of the city rises gradually from the r., and on the S. and W. is considerably elevated. The compact part is more than a mile in length and about three-fourths of a mile wide; and the streets are arranged with great regularity. Little r., which crosses the city in its S. part, furnishes a valuable water-power; bridges cross this and also the Connecticut r., those over the latter connecting it with East Hartford. The most conspicuous public buildings are the State House, the City Hall, Trinity College, the American Asylum, the Retreat for the Insane, the Wadsworth Athenaeum, numerous elegant churches, an arsenal, the market-houses, etc. There are 5 Congregational churches, 3 Episcopalians, 2 Baptist, 8 Episcopal Methodist, 1 Protestant Methodist, 1 Roman Catholic, 2 Second Advent, 1 Presbyterian, 1 Unitarian, 1 Universalist, and 1 Jew's Synagogue—in all 24 churches. Trinity (formerly Washington) College was founded in 1824, and in 1850 had a president, 8 professors, 300 alumni, of which 130 were in the ministry, and 80 students, and a library of 12,000 volumes. It is under the control of the Episcopalians. The American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb was established by the late Rev. Thomas H. Gallaudet, and was the first institution of the kind in the United States; it has extensive buildings in the W. part of the city, and is the most flourishing and valuable asylum in the Union. The Retreat for the Insane is a little S. of the city, and, like the asylum, is a well-conducted and successful institution. Hartford has numerous academies and schools, which reflect great credit on the city; and it has a public press not surpassed for morality and intelligence; it has 2 daily papers, of which weekly editions are also published, 6 weeklies, and 2 monthlies. The dailies are the "H. Courant" (whig), and the "H. Times" (dem.); the weeklies, the "H. Courier" (whig), the "Republican" (F. S.), the "New England Fountain" (temperance), and the "Christian Secretary" (Bapt.), the "Calendar" (Episc.), and the "Religious Herald" (Congr.), devoted to religious subjects. Hartford is also celebrated for its extensive book business. As a manufacturing city, Hartford stands high, and contains numerous lumber yards, machine shops, fire-arm manufactories, boot and shoe factories, and a variety of handicrafts; and as a place of commerce, it has many advantages, its natural market being the valley of the Connecticut. It is also a depot of interior trade and railroad traffic, being in the centre of the State and intersected by railroads from every direction. Steamboats also ply regularly to New York. Pop. in 1810, 3,955; in 1820, 4,726; in 1830, 7,076; in 1840, 9,463; and in 1850, 17,966. The Indian name of the site of Hartford was "Suckeag." In 1633 the Dutch built a fort here, and in 1635 the Dutch having relinquished their claims to the English, Hartford was permanently settled by emigrants from Massachusetts under charge of Rev. Mr. Hooker. It was incorporated as a city in 1754, and is now governed by a mayor and municipal officers.

HENRICO county, Virg. Situate E., and contains 268 sq. m. Drained by affluents of James r., which bounds it S., and by Chickahominy r., its N. E. boundary. Surface undulating or broken, and much diversified; soil good, producing the cereals and tobacco; but the chief wealth of the co. arises from its vast mineral resources, its extensive commerce and growing manufactures. The great natural product of the earth is bituminous coal, deposits of which extend over a large part of it, and which is much sought after for its superior quality. The mines are deep, and widely wrought, and the quantity of coal annually brought up and exported, very great. Lying along the noble James r., at the head of navigation for the largest vessels, it has a fine situation for commanding the transportation of the products of the immense and fertile region of which it is the outlet. Ships from its ports visit all quarters of the world, loaded with corn, flour, wheat, tobacco, and coal. The falls of James r. furnish the best of water-power, with scarcely a limit to its extent. This has been used in part, and here are the largest flouring establishments in the State, and the best cotton and woolen factories. Though not a great agricultural county, its situation and other natural advantages make it one of the most important in the State. Farms 454; manuf. 290; dwell. 5,817, and pop.—wh. 23,800, fr. col. 3,668, sl. 16,109—total 43,572. Capital: Richmond. Public Works: James River Canal; Richmond, Frederick and Potomac R.
